It's important that donations are made to a variety of these campaigns because while all are in the general area of the campsite and do communicate, the different campaigns don't always or can't always share different resources. Grab a group of friends, make strips of paper, and shuffle to make donations.

It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

Let's also not forget about the time he used the mantle to manipulate Peter out of having a bad day (and other things).

Of all the ways to do it, Loki chooses evil bug army.

His time as Sorcerer Supreme was just constantly pushing the envelope of how much bullshit he could get away with before Strange finally lost his mind. He had two goals in mind: restart the Dragon Lines, and give Strange a swift kick up the ass. Everything else was just... he woke up that day and like, fucked around on Reddit until he figured out what he wanted to do.

itscomplicatedx Follow

Well it's the MCU formula (although that is changing) you can spend quite a bit of time doing some not so great stuff and then do one good thing and everything bad you ever did is totally forgotten (unless you're Loki or Tony Stark who seems to be the one hero who is usually an exception to that rule). And you can even keep doing shady stuff but as long as you're doing the shady stuff for the supposed right people then the end justifies the means apparently.

This is why I laugh every time someone accuses us of "woobifying" Loki and pretending he's never done anything wrong in his entire life. Like... sorry, are we the ones regularly going around proclaiming our fave to be a golden retriever ray of sunshine with a heart of gold? Lol

I've been weird and strange my entire life; that's why the word queer resonates with me.

millennialsfabwlw Follow

Good for you, I'm a lesbian. "Queer" is still a slur, regardless of if you use it for yourself or not. Just like when a woman calls herself a "bitch" or a black person a racist slur. But anyway, this just shows how the word "queer" is extremely vague nowadays and a straightie who isn't 100% gender conforming could call themselves "queer". Y'all cringy af.

latent-thoughts Follow

You need to go back and do some hard reading about the word queer and it's usage. It might just be a teaching moment for you. If it is a slur, then so is lesbian and gay. All of these words have a history of oppression attached to them, and all of them were adopted by the people who wanted them as representation. Queer is one word that includes all identities which aren't cishet, it's inclusive. The above thread was meant to be cheeky and sarcastic, which obviously went over your head.

The only cringe factor here are people like you who jump into fun conversations and try to ruin them with their tired rhetorics.

Anonymous asked:

People confuse the idea of having a job with fulfilling your purpose. #areyouhappy?

instructor144 answered:

I agree with you there. For the longest time, a job was a place you went to make money, nothing more. These days a lot of people think that a job has to mean something.

knittingsamurai Follow

I like to say my job supports my arts and crap habit.

instructor144 Follow

Exactly that. Mine supports my eating and buying running t shirts habits.

prismatic-bell

I think part of it is how looked down on many of us are in our jobs, and we like to believe there's a job where we make a difference. I am not lying to you when I tell you that today a woman whistled at me like I was a dog so she could get more hot sauce and that a man twice my age decided it was appropriate to refer to me as "how you doing, sweetie?" (I am 32 years old, he was a stranger.)

You can't help but hope it all means something, in the face of that.

birble-bobble Follow

I'd say it's also a problem with how much of your life is expected to be taken up by your job.

A lot of working class people don't have the time/energy for hobbies. You spend all day at work (plus a couple hours commuting) then get home to cook and sleep, then on weekends you spend the time cleaning and doing other chores, then it's back to work. Most people don't have a spouse that takes care of the house, and tons of people have to work overtime or work multiple jobs. The idea that your job should be fulfilling is because you probably won't have time to find fulfillment outside of work.

That expectation also puts the pressure on individuals and not the system itself. Because if someone complains about having to work themselves to the bone then their issues can be dismissed as them being in the wrong job, instead of taking the time to examine what's actually expected of people if they want to survive.

prismatic-bell

That is a very concise analysis.

daemonmatthias Follow

I was just thinking about this yesterday and struggling to articulate it this clearly, thank you.

Everyone thinks their job is supposed to be fulfilling instead of just a paycheck because we no longer have any true free time.

We're supposed to have a job that makes us enough money to afford basic necessities AND also enough to fund our fulfilling hobbies. But now jobs take up too much of our time and/or don't pay enough to even cover basic necessities, let alone any hobbies.

Literally our hobbies have been stolen from us.

And without hobbies, we have no choice but to seek fulfilment from our jobs.

prismatic-bell

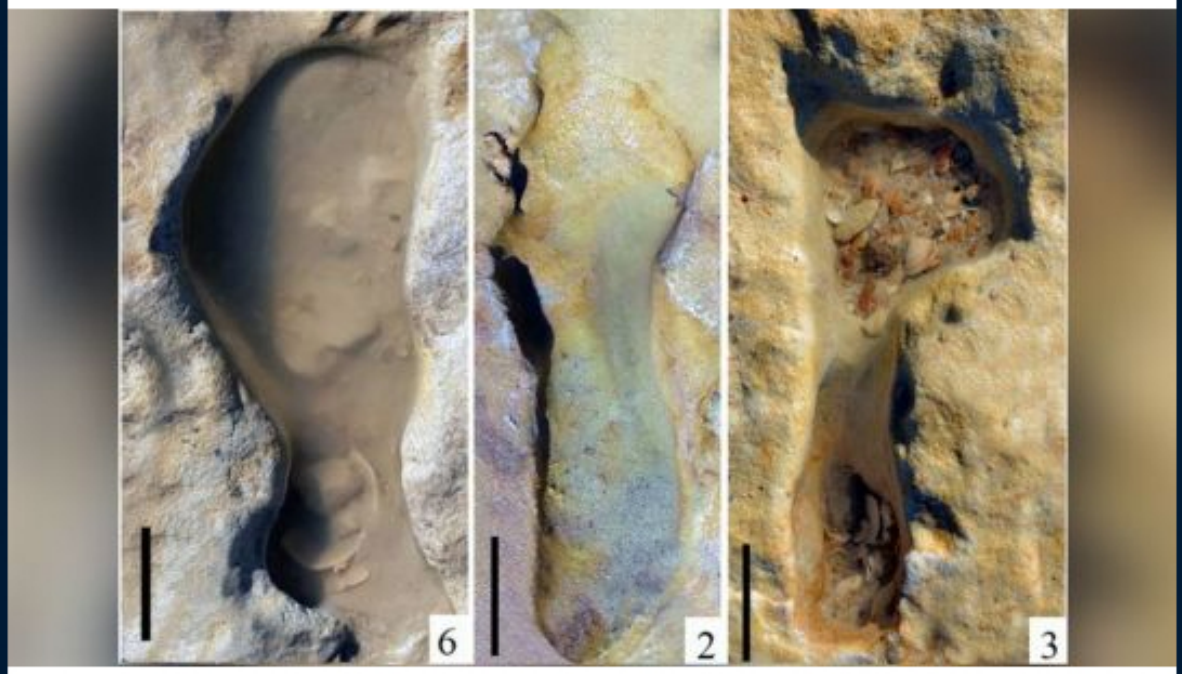
100,000-year-old Neanderthal footprints show children playing in the sand



Some 100,000 years ago, an extended family of 36 Neanderthals walked along a beach, with the kids jumping and frolicking in the sand, scientists report after analyzing the beachgoers' fossilized footprints in what is now southern Spain.

"We have found some areas where several small footprints appeared grouped in a chaotic arrangement," said Eduardo Mayoral, a paleontologist at the University of Huelva and lead author of the study, which was published online March 11 in the journal Scientific Reports.

The footprints "could indicate an area of passage of very young individuals, as if they were playing or loitering on the shore of the nearby waterlogged area," Mayoral told Live Science in an email.

In June 2020, two biologists discovered the tracks on Matalascañas beach, in Doñana National Park, after a period of intense storms and high tides. Read more.

You cannot convince me that Bezos is working hard enough to "earn" $2,537 per second. Or if you do believe he's "earning" that, that the people keeping his biz running comparatively deserve just under a nickel per second. ($15 per hour). We should tax the rich! Heavily!

the cool thing about paying $200 for someone to draw my werewolf fursona's big hard cock is that that's $200 untaxed dollars that goes directly into the artist's pocket so they can eat and pay their bills, so it's actually great and even better I always tip so they don't have to be like me and be miserable working retail 10 hours per day making half a living wage during a pandemic

so what i'm saying is it's really morally correct to pay people to draw a minotaur's gaping bootyhole for money and helps dismantle capitalism while doing it

My mother's first language is Spanish, so sometimes when I talk to her in English, she'll forget a word or two, but not a problem: she'll just create new words, words no one else was brave enough to use. She took my little cousins to the mall once and this is what she told me when she got back. She was like "it was so cute, i took the kids on one of those... um... El Horse Tornado or whatever, you know what it is." I'm sorry, El Horse Tornado? I'm gonna need you to elaborate. She was like "you know what I'm talking about, you put that attitude down. You put it down." Okay, putting it down, sorry. She said "don't try me, I'll kick your ass." And I was like "you don't need to kick my ass. Just put me in a Horse Tornado I'll be terrified." "You think you're funny?" "Mum how would you react if someone said that to you in Spanish? ¡Tornado de caballos! That sounds horrifying." She was like "ok that's pretty funny".

The founders with red dots are the slaveholders. The founders in yellow are the only ones who freed all the people they held.

Thomas Jefferson, who wrote the Declaration of Independence, raped one of the women he enslaved.

He freed his illegitimate children. But not their mom.

Kind of weird that in the year of our lord 2019 we're still walking around with pictures of old slaveholders in our pockets.

At least Ulysses S. Grant on the $50 and Benjamin Franklin on the $100 did eventually free the people they held and spoke out against the practice.

359 1.8K 7.7K

Arlen Parsa @arlenparsa · Sep 1, 2019

It... kind of does though.

Especially when you realize that some of the men who signed the Declaration of Independence were slave traders whose idea of freedom was themselves being free to conduct their business of importing people from Africa without paying taxes to King George

When people say "But everybody held slaves back then!" remind them of John Adams.

Before he became our second president, he was an abolitonist lawyer who represented escaped slaves in court and tried to free them.

Here is what he said about slavery:

"I have, through my whole life, held the practice of slavery in such abhorrence that I have never owned a Negro or any other slave, though I have lived for many years in times when the practice was not disgraceful, when the best men in my vicinity thought it not inconsistent with their character, and when it has cost me thousands of dollars for the labor and subsistence of free men, which I might have saved by the purchase of Negroes at times when they were very cheap."

"This country was founded by a group of slave owners who told us that all men are created equal. To my mind, that is what's known as being stunningly and embarrassingly full of shit." - George Carlin

...PolitiFact going through history to fact check this guy was like that time CNN went through history to dig up dirt on Bernie, and all they found were videos of him planting trees, and telling kids that racism is bad.

prismatic-bell

Also, so we're clear, "slaves....Negroes or any other kind" would have referred to the practice of enslaving Natives and Caribbean island indigenous people. If you remember your Salem witch trials, Tituba was one of these slaves, and we could make a reasonable argument that Sacajawea was, as well. The phrase "any other kind" has nothing to do with indentured servitude or white people. It is specifically about other dark-skinned people who were enslaved for no other reason than their skin color.

I use my batshit mother in law as a barometer of the crazy bullshit y'all are going to have to deal with coming from the Talk Radio set. With that in mind:

A study of the Pfizer vaccine has been published that shows that the vaccine is effective for at least six months.

That does NOT mean that it's ONLY effective for six months, that does NOT mean that vaccination is futile because we're going to need another totally new vaccine every six months forever.

The study shows that the vaccine is up to 91.3% effective against coronavirus at six months since vaccination.

FOR COMPARISON, the annual flu vaccine is anywhere from 40-70% effective against the influenza virus, and at six months it is no longer effective at all.

Over 90% effective at 6 months is extremely good, please tell the alarmist assholes in your life not to panic.

As so often happens during AO3's twice-annual donation drives, people keep asking why AO3 gets more than their goal and yet [individual] can't get their GoFundMe funded.

There are various reasons, of course - and if I'm honest, I'm more angry about those GoFundMes needing to exist at all than I am about how people choose to allot their charitable giving. But I think the one that no one accounts for is just sheer numbers.

As I write this, it's the Sunday of the April donation drive of 2021. The goal was $50,000 (down from previous years) and right now the total is $257,812.43. That's a lot of money - to an individual. But AO3 is a website, not a person, and it's a site used by 3,581,000 registered users (according to the front page when I'm logged out).

Do the math on that. 3.5 million users donated a total of $250K. That works out to each registered user donating a little over 7 cents. When you consider that there are even more people who don't have accounts, it's more likely the equivalent of each person chipping in a nickel or less.

So yes, AO3 hits its goal every time and yes, they surpass it. They're a valued part of fandom for a lot of people, but even still the number of individual people who donate money is usually less than ten thousand. Out of three and a half million.

I too am outraged that people need to set up GoFundMes in order to pay their medical bills or their rent, but it's not AO3's fault that those funds need to exist and it's not AO3's fault that they reach enough people that a tiny percent of those people can fill their goal.

seekingthemacguffin Follow

I got my first shot a week ago and the lead-up to my period was very strange. Normally I start getting cramps about half a day before I start bleeding, but I had that pre-period crampy feeling for three days this time followed by a pretty heavy period. I was pretty concerned until I realized it might have something to do with having just gotten the vaccine. I'm definitely pleased to see they've started collecting data about it.

If you have room to maneuver when scheduling your shot definitely keep your cycle in mind.

That's because that picture was taken at what is known in its native language as Institut für Sexualwissenschaft, it is the place where the first trans healthcare was developed, where the term transsexual was coined.

Do you want to know what happened to the Institut für Sexualwissenschaft?

It was the victim of the very first Nazi book burning. Their teachings were outlawed and their books destroyed. Their leaders - such as Magnus Hirschfeld - were criminalized and exiled, if not outright murdered.

The fascists exterminated not just a generation of trans people, but they erased our history from the books almost entirely. It took us almost a century to get back to where we are now.

We've always been here, but our future is not guaranteed. We have to fight for our survival, because it's happening again.

My mother did this to my father once. They got into an argument, my very pregnant and hormonal mother stormed off...except they lived in a tiny apartment so the only place to go was to shut herself into the closet for a good long sulk. And while she was sitting in there, fuming, she looked up and saw her sewing kit on the shelf, and all my father's uniforms hanging right there.

So she picked one shirt and one pair of trousers, carefully, methodically ripped every third stitch out of every seam, and then hung them back up together so that he would be likely to pick them at the same time. This took her a couple hours, so by the time she was done, the anger had worn down. She came out, she and my father had a talk that ended in apologies, after which they were tired and went to bed. My mother swears up and down that she meant to warn my father about the sabotaged clothes in the morning, but he wore a different uniform set and they were both still feeling a little raw, so she didn't want to bring up the fight again. She decided to tell him that night instead.

And then she forgot.

Anyway, about four days later, my father apparently came home roughly an hour after he left for work, his clothes slowly, gently shredding off his body, the most bewildered expression on his face.

“Paula,” he said, his voice mildly shell-shocked. “Paula, my clothes are broken.”

My mother promptly burst out laughing so hard that she went into labor. And that’s the story of my birth, heralded by petty vengeance and utter confusion.

Adora, Catra, and the effects of their abuse

I had a stinky little thought while waking up this morning.

Spop is a show that shows the effects and long term trauma that comes from abuse. Namely the effects Shadow Weaver’s cruelty has on Catra and Adora, both throughout their childhood, but even after the fact, when they are no longer under her “care.” And to a lesser extent this trauma is echo’d in both Micah and to some extent Glimmer. But i’m going to focus on the main two.

We see early on, and honestly, consistently throughout the show, how Weaver hurts and abuses Catra. It’s constant and pretty much happens nearly every time they speak. It’s cruel words and physical harm on a regular and consistent basis. And it’s immediately obvious what the situation is. Especially when we see direct confirmation that Weaver was abusing Catra both mentally and physically, even when Catra was a very young child.

Oddly enough, we don’t quite see the similar situation with Adora. And it’s both strange and oddly fitting. Because Adora’s abuse is different, clearly. It’s creating self doubt, it’s tearing down unless she obeys. It’s manipulation, and gaslighting, and deceit. And I think that plays a role in why so much of the fandom didn't even think Adora was abused for so long. And even the ones who did seemed to often view her abuse as minimal or lesser.

I think one of the big reasons for this, and the reason for Catra and Adora not understanding each other is buried in this very clear difference in method.

Catra knows she is being abused and mistreated. She knows because no matter how good she is, no matter how much she succeeds, Weaver still tears her down. And it turns her, understandably, bitter.

Adora does not know she is being abused. Adora, especially early on, thinks that what Weaver was doing was simply how the horde is. And maybe she's partially right, but Weaver's abuse was more severe than the horde's culture.

And we see this create the rift between Adora. Because Adora is unaware, she's been so manipulated that to her, the abuse is invisible. Where Catra is acutely aware, she's painfully aware of the abuse. And the nature of it being so constant and unavoidable confirms that it is abuse.

This difference plays a huge role in their eventual fallout. And it continues to tear them apart, even, and especially during the final season.

By season 5, Catra has long known she was abused, and is now identifying the fact that it has caused her to hurt others and make herself miserable. And we see her begin the process of healing and growing out of that.

The same cannot be said for Adora. Throughout most of season 5 we see Adora's self confidence crumble, not for the first time. And we see her struggle with dealing with her emotions. It becomes much clearer that Adora is a victim, just as much, when Weaver manipulates and pushes her to take the failsafe. And she does, because of course she does. Adora, still, is not aware of the reality that Weaver abused her. She's more aware of Catra's abuse, but not her own for most of the season.

Her desperate need and want to sacrifice herself to protect others is a symptom of that abuse, but Adora just views it as being "one of the good guys" for literally most of the show.

It's not until we see Catra realize it, that we start to see Adora realize she was also a victim of Weaver. When Catra pushes Weaver at the failsafe, that is the first time that Adora starts understanding. Because Catra is right, Weaver had always pushed Adora to sacrifice. For the Horde, for the greater good, to protect her squad, her friends, the world. But why does it always have to be her?

And we can see in Adora's expressions that she's confused and unsure. And even though she takes the failsafe, we can see the uncertainty behind the hero.

The second time Adora is forced to confront her own abuse is when Catra leaves. Catra by now has realized what's happened. She understands that Adora was groomed by Weaver, groomed to die. And the failsafe confirmed it. So when she tries to run, and Adora chases. Catra has had enough. She calls Adora out on her willingness to die. And Adora doesn't have a response, at least not a good one. She parrots what she's heard, and even when she says that someone has to do it, we can once again see in her expression the uncertainty of that decision.

Because she knows that someone has to, but she knows that Catra is also right.

And we can see her starting to push back the grooming around this time as well. Her calling out Weaver and saying that Weaver "ruins people, ruins any chance they could be happy." is not just her acknowledging Catra's abuse, but in a less direct way, her own.

The next time we see her confront it is as She-Ra, when she meets Mara. Mara is aware of her abuse by this point, and Adora has finally begun to realize it herself. And here Mara tells Adora she's worth more than what she gives." Which is vital for her, because it goes directly against what Weaver manipulated her into being, a martyr. And we can see how much this has shaken her. Adora's no longer able to brush off the concern people have for her. She hears Mara, and there's finally no brushing it off by saying "i'm She-Ra i have to do this." Because Mara, the previous She-Ra wouldn't buy it, and Adora knows that.

A special mention for this is when Weaver dies. For so long we've seen Adora be blind to the abuse. And in the moment of Weaver's death, when her and Catra are crying, I think that moment is important in her realizing that Weaver was their monster. She abused them both so much, and it is both painful to watch her die, as someone who for so long was like a mother figure, and a huge weight off her shoulders and relief, because she can't hurt them anymore.

The final moment that Adora is forced to acknowledge her abuse is the heart. Adora loses. She can't beat the virus, can't release the heart. And we see her giving up. For once in her life Adora is giving up as the hero. And that's huge. That's someone we never see her do. Because she was never allowed to quit, to show weakness, to fail. Her whole life was about how she has no choice but to succeed, no matter what it costs her. And this time she fails, and she accepts her failure, for how much it hurts her. But then there's Catra. Who knows the extent of both of their pain. Catra, who has now firsthand seen why Adora became like this. Why Adora is willing to die. And if no one will fight for Adora, Catra always will. Catra doesn't ask Adora to save the day, she doesn't ask her to save the worlds. All Catra asks is for Adora to stay with her. To just let it be them. Let them be together and be happy.

And as we all know. That saves them all. Adora choosing to push aside the martyr she was raised to be, to just love Catra. To just love the person who's always matter the most to her, that saved her. That is when Adora begins to recover. And i think that's really fucking beautiful.

Dating has made me see past men's bullshit so easily. Most women are flattered if a man proposes he put together a home cooked meal a few dates in. All that means is he doesn't want to spend money and wants you as close to his bedroom as possible. He's not being a gentleman if he wants to pick you up for a date, he wants to be in control of your transportation so he can pressure you to stop by his place afterwords. Please recognize that men do these things for their own gain and don't buy into it.

omnivore-odyssey Follow

For the people who are offended by this, chill the fuck out. She's saying; especially in the context of dating, be aware that men have an agenda.

Don't blindly trust that a man is being nice just to be nice, he has a goal with his niceness just like you have a goal with your actions, but his goals might not be benevolent.

Be aware of actions that take control out of your hands or place you in a position of vulnerability.

This is literally just tips to help women see through actions that may make them vulnerable to predators!!! Women need to be aware of these things bc there are men who use "niceness" to manipulate women, and women are often socialized not to see the motivations behind these behaviors.

I've had men go out of their way to hold a door open for me, only to realize that the reason they did this was to check out my ass. If I refuse, I look like a jerk, and they know this. Socially, I have no way to reject their "niceness" without appearing rude, and they take advantage of this.

Predatory men will offer to buy women drinks in order to get her drunk so her defenses are lowered. Ask for the same price in a non alcoholic drink or food item and they get angry bc the point was to lower her defenses, not to be nice.

Predatory men will offer to help a woman in a situation (like carrying groceries for her) as a way to get inside her house.

Rapists and killers have used this tactic and other "niceness" tactics that women are socialized to accept bc they know that women are not taught that these are strategies and that socially, it's hard to reject these strategies without appearing "bitchy," which we are socialized to fear.

If you give the wrong man the "benefit of doubt" and blindly trust that he is just being nice, you can end up raped and/or dead.

Women and girls need to be taught what strategies predatory men use in order to know how to safely avoid them.

Not teaching women and girls these things is deliberately leaving them vulnerable.

It's always good to be aware of these strategies and how to avoid them.

hating-alison-ashley Follow

Even guys who don't have rape and murder in mind get angry at women talking about these things. They pretend they are offended that we would think that of them, but really they are angry that it reduces how effective they are for all men. If it was socially acceptable for women to say no to men at any time, then a lot of men would have no success with dating at all. They rely on having a stacked deck. Most men, if they had to rely on being actually caring, respectful and attractive to women would fail utterly, so any dismatling of that advantage sends them into a rage. Of course they'll honestly believe they are being discriminated against rather than it being an unnatural advantage taken away.

nobody thinks fictional children are real. and nobody who cares about fictional child porn is totally complacent about child porn irl.

but the argument is about normalization. its about how fictional child porn normalizes pedophilia and can be used to groom children. there are countless people who have discussed how immoral content was exposed to them and groomed them into abusive relationships. its a reason why many of these people who preach about "drawings not affecting reality" end up being outed as pedophiles and predators.

if fictional children being sexualized does not matter because they arent real, then why do you get angry when a gay character is killed off? why do you care when a show treats its characters of color poorly? or when a female character is treated worse than the male character? they're all fictional right?

you cant apply your logic to one thing and then treat something else like it exists in a vacuum because it makes you uncomfortable to confront your very weird and very creepy fetishes.

Vegans of tumblr, listen up. Harvesting agave in the quantities required so you dont have to eat honey is killing mexican long-nosed bats. They feed off the nectar and pollinate the plants. They need the agave. You want to help the environment? Go back to honey. Your liver and thyroid will thank you, as well. Agave is 90% fructose, which can cause a host of issues. Bye.

Beekeeper here! Just wanted to say that the fact that vegans won't eat honey is very silly. Harvesting honey does not hurt bees. The invention of modern moveable-frame hives means we can remove a selected frame, extract the honey and return it without killing a single bee.

If we destroyed the colony to harvest honey there would be no bees for next year, and beekeepers are incredibly careful to keep their bees healthy and thriving. We take excess honey that they don't need, and it stops the hive from becoming honey-bound, meaning that there's so much honey the Queen has nowhere to lay eggs. And if the winter is harsher than expected and the remaining honey store runs low, we feed the bees plenty to make sure they survive. We also make sure that pests are controlled, bees are treated for disease, and the hive is weatherproof and in good repair, all things that wild bees struggle with.

Keeping bees in properly managed hives where they don't starve or die from preventable disease is much better for them than being left to fend for themselves, and they're far too important to be left alone.

All the fruits and vegetables that vegans do eat couldn't exist without bees, and the hives which pollinate those crops also produce excess honey which the beekeepers can sell to help keep themselves and their hives going.

TLDR: BUY THE HONEY, HELP THE BEES.

To Celebrate almost 1000 Followers (which are probably bots haha), I wanted to make a post about me. What I love and hate! So let me start with that:

• My name is Julia

• I am 23 (born in 1997) and a Libra ♎

• Originally from Croatia but living in Austria

•My favourite colour is green (it symbolises spring and nature)

•My favourite season is Fall (I love all the colours in that time and I am basically a Witch and I love Halloween 🎃)

• I study Media and Communications. One day I wanna be a journalist 🌞

•My taste in music is pretty simple: mostly Lord of the Rings soundtrack, Indie Rock or Acid Techno! There is no in between haha.

•I love doing artistic stuff! I paint and draw, although I am not very good, I enjoy it and it reduces my anxiety.

• I also like to read! Currently I am in a Paulo Coelho phase!

•My all time favourite Movie that is (you guessed it!): Lord of the Rings! I absolutely love J.R.R Tolkien and what he managed to create. It is not just the movie 🎥 it is that whole world and the story itself that fascinates me. Since I was a child I could escape into that world and make my own fantasy world with the help of his books.

•I love Photography! So I will post about that.

• I am a mental health (or trying to be) advocate. I suffer from a severe depression and anxiety disorder. I got the diagnosis 2019 and since than I am in therapy. I will also post about that!

•This is basically it! If you wanna know more about me, you can DM me!

and it was WILD

I'd finish a task in a day, only to be told that was my task for the week. my boss was blown away and raved about my efficiency. which was very nice but like...dude. you gave me about 6 hours worth of work, and that's at a leisurely pace with an hour-long lunch break. why are you so impressed?

eventually I started messing around on my phone for hours to drag eventually I started messing around on my phone for hours to drag the tasks out longer, because I felt bad when my boss had to scramble to find things for me to do. I got like ten fanfic chapters written per month that way

meanwhile, at my last retail job, I got in trouble for talking to vendors at the adjoining stalls during slow periods loki-snape-our-hero asked:

Ragnarok needs to be a lesson to ALL writers. If you think a character overshadows your favorite characters or any characters, then don't. make. them. suffer. for. it. Seriously, just change the character to where they aren't needed much or don't write them in at all, but to feel that they NEED or HAVE to suffer, just because they overshadow another character(s) is absolutely DISGUSTING behavior. It's why we don't like ragnarok/Chris/taika because they felt Loki NEEDED to suffer because he overshadowed Chris. I met someone who DESPISES and HATES ragnarok for doing that and YET, they also felt the need to make sure Loki suffered because he was overshadowing their favorite character Thor🤦‍♀️ guys PLEASE. If you don't like a character, just. don't. write. them. in. How hard is that???!?!?!??!

GIF by cloqworkbird

lucianalight answered:

Or alternatively, if another character is overshadowing your fave or main character, maybe it's because your main character is not as interesting to most people? Maybe try to write the main character better and with more depth instead of putting down every other character just so your main character can shine?

More importantly, the writer should treat the characters, even the ones they hate, fairly and let them finish their arc meaningfully.

regentofjoetunheim Follow

Or don't rewrite something that started out as a Shakespearean Drama into a slapstick, simply because your favorite character can't convey feelings in a meaningful way. Maybe recast, let the ‚overshadowing' character tag along more and let the overshadowed character safe the other. Give them a meaningful conflict, fears, doubts, vulnerabilities and inner strength.

Anonymous asked:

The trailers for Falcon and Winter Soldier were also full of humor and action, and the show turned out to be different (Buckyi's trauma was shown and how he deals with those 70 years of killing) So I think Loki's trauma will be shown too. But they will show the trauma in the show, not in the trailer.

lucianalight answered:

I really really hope you're right and honestly the latest episode(ep. 4) of TFATWS gave me so much hope about Loki series. If they do what they did in TFATWS, it would be fantastic.

nikkoliferous

I think the problem is not necessarily the presence/amount of humour in the trailers but the type of humour. To my recollection, Marvel's overall narrative has been much more consistent in accepting Bucky as a victim. Whereas in Loki's case, he started out very much as a victim but then the decision was made to retcon his past to make it less sympathetic. And the most "humourous" moments in the trailers that we've seen seem to be upholding that version of Loki's history, not the one he started out with in Thor (2011). Add to that that much of the humour is also on the super campy, bordering-on-parody side of things and... yeah. It's not that the show looks more comedic in tone than serious (or at the very least, it's not only that). It's that the specific type of humour we've been shown is just... 1) not even particularly funny and 2) not consistent with the character.

I looked to Tramp for inspiration and resilience when I was homeless for a few years. My logic was if a cartoon dog could live on the streets and manage to find shelter and food with a smile, so could I. I did copy Tramp to a degree by making friends with a young employee at an Italian restaurant who slipped me leftovers after closing. It wasn't all glamorous though; I went through some awful experiences not seen in Lady and the Tramp. But pretending to be Tramp made street life somewhat tolerable.

A theory: Margo and Eliot got it as a joke. They were planning to ritually burn it. But Quentin loved nesting in it, so Eliot said "it's not that bad, Bambi." It was a point of some contention. Margo kept disappearing it, and Eliot kept bringing it back (picture blue dress/pink dress shenanigans a la Disney's Sleeping Beauty, with Q in the background, brow furrowed, watching it all like a confused princess). Eventually Margo realized she had to let it go as Eliot kept gazing Quentin in the chair with a longing look in his eyes she'd never seen before.

I know most people don't care, but here's the real answer.

Snapchat built a shitty Android app. On iOS, Snapchat uses the phone's camera directly to take a picture, ensuring the highest possible quality.

On Android, Snapchat opens the camera, but then takes a screenshot, instead of telling the camera to take a picture. This means that the camera never gets to adjust it's focus and lighting, or provide stabilization to the picture. Instead, you get the best that shaky human hands can get, which means low quality pictures.

Due to the popularity of Snapchat, this difference actually spreads the superiority complex of iOS. Android manufacturers have been innovating new hardware since the creation of cell phones. Apple only upgrades when they're worried about being seen as outdated, or they need "new features" to push their phone. It also shows that iPhones are a status symbol, that have no reason to be as expensive as they are.

To be fair to Apple, they've built a consistent ecosystem. If you have an iPhone, you can pick up any other iPhone and know how it works. Android is different by design however, with literally anyone free to modify it as they want to. Whether that is to fit certain hardware, or add new features, or meet a specific artistic design, Android has more total devices, support for more hardware configurations (even laptops) and is available for anyone to use however they want.

Snapchat made a deliberate poor design decision, and should shoulder the blame for their shitty app. But that would require supporting the largest userbase in the world over their elite base of iPhone users.

hey ao3 can you like give the extra $38k you made from this month’s funds drive to charity

blooming-wilting

You know it legally is a charity, right?

If x charity aims for £10, but gets £15, would you expect then to give back the extra five or give it then to another charity? No. Any extra costs go into the “rainy day” fund; sometimes servers crash or break, sometimes false reports are made that require the legal team, sometimes you need to hire coders or what not to implement new features or fix bugs or deal with broken code ...

The money they aimed for is the bare minimum, which goes towards things like basic server costs and domain names and legal advice and so forth, but they don't just "pocket" the rest (as people claim). It's not a business. It has no advertisements. It needs some "rainy day" cash to function.

You can't ask a charity to give money to another charity.

It needs what it gets to function and improve.

> They don't "pocket" excess money. They have a publicly accessible budget - waaaay more info than most charities, in fact. In it, you can clearly see where each dollar goes. (Also, you are vastly underestimating either how much traffic AO3 gets or how much servers/hosting costs.)

In my experience, people who don't work in web design and hosting just have no concept of how heavy a load something like AO3 would have. Not only is the traffic absolutely buck wild, but the quantity of data that archive needs to store is fuckoff crazy. I'm talking "more than the library of congress" crazy. The only reason it doesn't require Netflix levels of data serving is that it's text based rather than video.

AO3 is in the top 300 websites in the world, and the top 100 in the US. It is the number 2 literature website.

Number 2 in the entire world. JSTOR is 20.

It sees about 6 million people a day. About 250k an hour. Each of those people is loading multiple pages, many are running searches that execute on literally hundreds of potential variables per search. The demands involved are astronomical.

JSTOR, btw, makes 85 million dollars a year.

It's 18 ranks below AO3's traffic, and takes in 650 times the amount of money.

But let's say you think that's an unfair comparison. Would you say that the Project Gutenberg Literature Archival Group- another text based archive that handles literature operating outside traditional copyright requirements- is more similar?

Because it sees all of 4% of the traffic that AO3 handles.

Care to guess its budget?

Double that of AO3.

AO3 is doing shit on the kind of shoestring budget that I fully, 100% cannot comprehend. And that's just the archival service.

The 130k also pays for the OTW's legal team, which they use to defend the right of fandom to fucking exist.

It's absolutely batshit fucked up that people are fighting to have the OTW defunded and AO3 shut down. They are the only organized group that actually stands directly between fandom- all the art and the fics and the vids and the music and the chats and the memes and everything we love about interactive, transformative work- and an incalculable amount of lawsuits.

nuttersinc Follow

madenthusiasms Follow

The load on AO3's servers has been astronomical during the pandemic, something like twice or three times what it was before. Five days ago the AO3 Status Twitter said that the previous week hit new highs for usage - 68.6 million views Sunday alone (the new daily record) with 448 million views over the preceding week, up by 140 million from the year before.

The tweet ended "Are you all okay?" and of course we aren't. Plague stalks the land, people have been sick, lost their jobs, worked insane hours if they kept them, and locked in their homes for a year. "Apologies for bringing it up" said the next tweet.

Imagine going through this without AO3. Without fic to read to Imagine going through this without AO3. Without fic to read to distract us, without the comment function to remind us we're not alone at our keyboard. (I started writing again for the first time in decades in the hopes of making the slightest connection, of one comment or kudo to tell me I had not vanished. We are a social species that has been cut off from society for a full turn around the sun.)

The purists hate it because they cannot control it, cannot bluster or threaten or shout it to heel, and their inability to define its limits lead to libel against it, its finances, and its users. And I notice that they're trying to topple it with the same accusation that is being used to try to topple everything from Waverly Furniture to the entire US Democratic party - QAnon's favorite war cry of "PEDOS, PEDOS, PEDOS!"

"I saw Goodie Pelosi and Goodie YurionIceFan in the wooooooods messin' with a little helpless chiiiiiild! Break in 'n' hang all the Democrats! Shut down AO3!!!"

In the meantime, none of the purists howling over the archive of fandom's very own hosting fiction about fictional characters fictionally touching each other's fictional junk have one little peep to make about the latest evangelical mega-minister or conservative politician linked to ACTUAL crimes against ACTUAL children.

Different companies that analyze this shit come up with slightly different answers, but this gives a sense. AO3 is somewhere in the vicinity of Spotify and its for-profit ilk and many ranks above a lot of the popular webnovel sites.

PLEASE STOP USING NSFR IN YOUR TAGS/POSTS/BIOS !!!!!!

a muslim person did not start this!! by tagging your drink, food, cursing, and music posts you are heavily patronizing us and taking away the entire point of our ramadan!! please stop!

it is on us to resist any urges, most of us have been fasting since we were children we do not need this warning and we have told non muslims this repeatedly! "not safe for ramadan" itself just sounds so weird and very rude, even if you do not mean it in that way. this entire thing reeks of performative activism.

If you are going to be tagging your nsfw then tag it with "nsfw" or a personalized tag like you do all the other months of the year, non muslims do this every year and it's just useless to us! again! non muslims please stop speaking for us and educating others about our religious holiday, we get your intentions are good but you are heavily miss informing others about our holiday! thank you but please listen to us on this!

it will not break our fast if we see food, drink, accidentally hear music, accidentally see a curse word, or accidentally see something explicit! it will not! please just listen to us. most of us are not even online for the majority of the month, the entire point is to be closer to God and our religion! why would we be wasting time on the internet?

If you want to be actual allies then consider spreading the word about the hijab ban in france where girls under the age of 18 will not be allowed to wear the hijab! thank you!

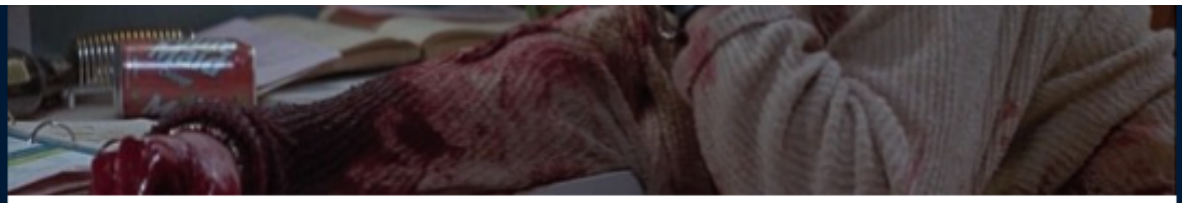
I miss the comfortable, cluttered home interiors in movies like you could tell people lived there and even if things were tidied they weren't sanitized. Nowadays movie and tv home interiors look like they double as the set for a lysol commercial....like who lives here?? Mr. Clean??

filmnoirsbian Follow

In scream (1996) it's really evident in every home scene that people live there. Things aren't overwhelmingly messy but there are the little messes here and there that build up over time as you rush through your day:

Even here at the desk you can see stacks of books and papers and a soda can, clear evidence of life:



Contrast this with scream 4 (2011), you get absolutely none of the same sense of home and daily life. Every room is styled like architectural digest is due to stop by any moment. The teenagers' bedrooms are carefully placed, with no individuality, and their cars look freshly washed in every scene. Even as syd fights for her life, her surroundings are spotless:

In fact, directly contrasted to the original scream, every kitchen in scream 4 (and there are many) is spotless, with nothing out of place, so much so that jill has to purposefully wreck a lot of kirby's house just to convince people there was a fight there (even though...there was).

This is the kitchen from scream:

And yeah, a lot of that can be blamed on the party, but there's stuff on the counters, and dishes in the sink, like you would find in any normal kitchen on any average day of the week.

Now look at this kitchen in scream 4, supposedly also a normal kitchen, also on an average day of the week:

You cannot convince me someone actually lives there.

So I found the letter that the Animorphs author and trans ally K. A. Applegate wrote after the series ended and I’m FLOORED

> catapultpillar • Jul 10, 2017, 8:04 PM
>
> I stopped reading at some point so I had to check the wikipedia synopsis. Of the check the wikipedia synopsis. Of the controversial ending, KA Applegate said:

> Dear Animorphs Readers:
>
> Quite a number of people seem to be annoyed by the final chapter in the Animorphs story. There are a lot of complaints that I let Rachel die. That I let Visser Three/One live. That Cassie and Jake broke up. That Tobias seems to have been reduced to unexpressed grief. That there was no grand, final fight-to-end-all-fights. That there was no happy celebration. And everyone is mad about the cliffhanger ending.
> So I thought I'd respond.

> Animorphs was always a war story. Wars don't end happily. Not ever. Often relationships that were central during war, dissolve during peace. Some people who were brave and fearless in war are unable to handle peace, feel disconnected and confused. Other times people in war make the move to peace very easily. Always people die in wars. And always people are left shattered by the loss of loved ones.
> That's what happens, so that's what I wrote. Jake and Cassie were in love during the war, and end up going their seperate ways afterward. Jake, who was so brave and capable during the war is adrift during the peace. Marco and Ax, on the other hand, move easily past the war and even manage to use their experience to good effect. Rachel dies, and Tobias will never get over it. That doesn't by any means cover everything that happens in a war, but it's a start.

Here's what doesn't happen in war: there are no wondrous, climactic battles that leave the good guys standing tall and the bad guys lying in the dirt. Life isn't a World Wrestling Federation Smackdown. Even the people who win a war, who survive and come out the other side with the conviction that they have done something brave and necessary, don't do a lot of celebrating. There's very little chanting of 'we're number one' among people who've personally experienced war.

I'm just a writer, and my main goal was always to entertain. But I've never let Animorphs turn into just another painless video game version of war, and I wasn't going to do it at the end. I've spent 60 books telling a strange, fanciful war story, sometimes very seriously, sometimes more tongue-in-cheek. I've written a lot of action and a lot of humor and a lot of sheer nonsense. But I have also, again and again, challenged readers to think about what they were reading. To think about the right and wrong, not just the who-beat-who. And to tell you the truth I'm a little shocked that so many readers seemed to believe I'd wrap it all up with a lot of high-fiving and backslapping. Wars very often end, sad to say, just as ours did: with a nearly seamless transition to another war.

So, you don't like the way our little fictional war came out? You don't like Rachel dead and Tobias shattered and Jake guilt-ridden? You don't like that one war simply led to another? Fine. Pretty soon you'll all be of voting age, and of draft age. So when someone proposes a war, remember that even the most necessary wars, even the rare wars where the lines of good and evil are clear and clean, end with a lot of people dead, a lot of people crippled, and a lot of orphans, widows and grieving parents.

If you're mad at me because that's what you have to take away from Animorphs, too bad. I couldn't have written it any other way and remained true to the respect I have always felt for Animorphs readers.

You want something even crazier? Animorphs ended in May 2001. She didn't know what was coming, but damn if she didn't give her readers a much needed dose of reality about the horrors of war right before we were really going to need it.

becuzitisbitter Follow

If you enjoy easily-digestible sci fi, and can get your hands on the animorphs books, I really recommend it. They're fucking great and thoughtful in a lot of ways you might not have picked up on as a kid. I've read the first dozen or so books over the last couple of years and they've literally changed the way I look at the world.

impling Follow

Not to butt in since the series came along when I was in high school and thus a bit after my time, but I am a librarian and as such I am ALL ABOUT matching people to the books they need in whatever format is available.. You can download the entire series. It's free.

Applegate's statement on the piracy subject is quoted from an AMA here for those that have moral issues with it. for those that don't want to click, she says: "We do not take them down. Or ask for them to be taken down. I think once the books are available to buy—paper or e—it would be nice if people who could afford it would buy. (our kids have very expensive tastes. You know: food and whatnot.) But for years they've been unavailable except by 'pirated' means. These men and women kept the series alive. They kept the books available. So no, we did NOT take these books down."

Go forth, and read.

litheammunition Follow

People seem to act as if he was personally responsible for creating the British Empire, when his whole military career was fighting fascists and Nazis and then he just married into the royal family (after a pretty rough start to his life, marked by war and personal tragedy). People don't seem to have this sort of animosity towards the Queen, who was actually born into it.

But disrespectful jokes were kind of his thing, so I suppose we can't complain.

knifelesbian69 Follow

c4tb0yhet Follow

also I don't think he even married in lol like? him and the queen were literally related-

knifelesbian69 Follow

Yeah they're like 3rd cousins? People are weird about the royals tho

litheammunition Follow

Yeah, people are weird about the royals.

They will spend years obsessively salivating for a sick old man to die, making a bunch of ghoulish ageist comments about how he's too old to live and fantasising about him struggling to breathe, and then the instant he passes away they will rush as fast as their little legs can carry them to churn out some truly ignorant takes.

Like claiming he colonised India (he was born about 200 years too late for the start, came from the Danish/Greek royal families and married to the UK, and it was independent by the time of the queen's coronation) or that he marched with Nazis (he was sent to a Jewish school in Germany as a literal child and the photos are him walking behind his favourite sister's coffin when she tragically died when he was 16, this was the same time that world leaders were happily attending the Berlin Olympics, he and his school moved to the UK due to the Nazis taking power and when we was 18 he signed up to fight them - he literally punched Nazis, but the people who just talk about it would now rather claim he was one).

I don't like the royals at all, but if edgy teens are mocking an elderly man's appearance and begging him to just die already, then gorging like vultures when he does, it's not exactly nice to see as a) a human being with basic sympathy, having matured past that edgy teen phase or b) someone with vulnerable elderly relatives, much in the same way as body shaming is bad because you hit people who weren't your target.

They're also reaching to justify their indecent behaviour by making ridiculous claims like the above about how evil he was, and exposing their ignorance because they haven't bothered to check the basic facts. They care more about hating a guy for things he didn't do than they care about which accusations are true, and will happily spread it all without checking because the important thing is justifying how violently obsessed they are with an old man's suffering.

So yeah, people are weird about the royals. People are obsessed with them. That's you. I don't like them at all, but I'm still human and grounded enough to have basic sympathy and respect for the truth, whereas you are going so far as to wish death for all sympathisers (so now you want me to die as well?) Maybe try taking a deep breath and logging off for a while, because this level of rabid obsession isn't healthy.

more-like-reyna Follow

Bro how's that royal boot taste 😍

veronicasummersfelton Follow

Hey, he may not have personally colonized India, but he definitely profited from it. They destroyed India's economy to profit uk. The North African campaign and the Burma campaign would be impossible without Indians.

Not mention countless Indians fighting under the British flag, in wars that Britain started. Including the world wars. The entire textile Industry in India was destroyed so that cheap cotton made in Manchester could be sold. And of course the murders, or rather the Strategic Murders to divide India.

Oh yes, did i mention Kohinoor, the one sitting on the crown of the CURRENT QUEEN, HIS WIFE?? that's ours.

It was so bad in India, that some freedom fighters even contacted Hitler. You have to be a special kind of evil, that Hitler is preferred over you. If it wasn't for Hitler and the Naz*s, Imperial Britain would have been the absolute villains of the world.

Many South Asians and African politicians and businessmen who have committed fraud, now live in UK. There, these people pay the lawyers and politicians to make sure they never get extradited. So, don't sit there and moral police us. This is the death of a loathsome person. Good riddance.

an-adventureland Follow

Also for all of these people going "he's like your grandfather" "you have elderly relatives too don't you? How would you feel if people make jokes about their death" well I am sorry but my grandfather or any of my relatives weren't part of a institution that colonised half the world and killed millions of people and sucked their resources dry ✌🏾 ✌🏾

You bet my ass I am gonna celebrate lol, he wasn't just some "old dude" 😊 please read a history book world isn't just west, and you don't get to police me about this thing

Oh his life was tragic? His sister died? Sad :(Well guess what this same dude was a part of the institution who SLAUGHTERED my people, where small kids were orphaned had to see their parents die in front of them. He may not be directly doing it but he still took part in it. This guy was literally sitting on centuries of Riches, power and privilege. If he was just some old man, I would've been sympathetic, but unfortunately for you he wasn't just some man. Also he was alive till yet just because he was so fucking filthy rich with best medical help, his body was literally decaying 🤦‍♀️

I was thinking...

In Avenger Endgame we think that the captain returned the Infinity Stones to their place, we think (or they want us to think) that Loki altered the timelines when he escaped with the Tesseract and someone also said that the captain will chase Loki. But what if Loki was not the only one to alter the Universe? Perhaps the captain failed in his mission and created other realities as well, in fact staying in the past must have caused some disorder in time.

Maybe Loki is the one who should hunt down the captain. Maybe those scenes where Loki takes the form of the cap (The dark world and Endgame) were not jokes, maybe they were clues of something that was going to happen.

Well, don't tell me it wasn't cute to think that this was possible for a few seconds

Theory on why the Loki show is last in the lineup

I'm loving the MCU TV shows so far, but I've got a few fun theories floating around already and I'm wondering if anyone else has thought about these things in a more organized way than I have.

1. The Numbers

In WandaVision, there seemed to be more numbers displayed prominently than was really needed for storytelling purposes. Numbers that Darcy's team said or wrote, house numbers, radio numbers, etc.

So far TFATWS has the same relationship with numbers. They're starting to jump out at me, whenever they're displayed prominently or said distinctly.

They're all short numbers, with a few digits max. I don't have any distinct impressions as to what they could be referring to, but if there is some sort of through-pattern that's tied to Loki and his time-hopping shenaniganry in the last show, they could function as anchors, coordinates, time-stamps, etc. Hard and fast locations in time and space which could serve either as official info for the TVA to work with using its own systems, or as Loki's own waypoints when he's got his beloved Tesseract.

2. What you see isn't always what you get

The last time we see Spectrum, she's being invited upward by a Skrull who was disguised as a human agent.

Loki's a god of tricks and illusion and chaos. I saw a great parallel post that showed Darcy (in WandaVision) and Loki (in Ragnarok) dressed in blue and wrapped in chains, and I had the crack thought: what if that's really Loki somehow?

Between Loki's impending chaos and this actual instance of someone not being who they seemed to be, I can't shake the concept that some of the other characters we see in WandaVision and TFATWS might not be who we think they are. And that more than one of them may be various iterations of Loki, toying with the timeline while he also does whatever else he does in his own show.

3. Loki's show comes last in the lineup because that's the big reveal

If there has been a series of slender plot lines tying these three shows together, then Loki is the one who's going to tug on them and make them dance. Of course he has to go last. He's the God of Stories.

But we'll have to be patient a while longer, because he's not going to give us his secrets ahead of time. He's going to wait for the best possible moment and then shine, so we will adore him for his clever genius. So until then, we'll just have to wait for him to masterfully retcon the universe as we know it.

Loki and Swords

So I saw the new Loki trailer again, and realized that Loki is in possession of 2 different swords in it, at different times. I took screenshots for comparison.

So here^, my guess is that he steals this one from Wunmi

Mobius's character after engaging her in combat, then proceeds to use it to fight the other TVA officials.

It's shaped like a cutlass or scimitar or even a dao.

And the second one^ is a more mysterious sword. It seems to come with a proper holster and scabbard, and it looks like a gladius or a shortish viking sword. It has a prominent guard, hilt and pommel.

Both are small, one handed swords, but both are distinctively shaped.

Loki in Thor (2011) & Loki (2021)

> "I've been playing him for ten years now. And that's crazy to me. By the time [the series] is out, I'll be 40. And when I was cast, I was 29, which is a great chunk of my life. Somebody else can do the maths. I think it's just over a quarter. [laughs] But the point is, there's this sense of 'I know this character now.' I feel that the audience knows him. And playing him, and playing him truthfully but presenting him with new challenges, which then I'd have to change him in different ways, is the most exciting aspect of it. So there's this... you've got his very specific gifts. His intelligence, his treachery, his mischief, his magic. And then seeing him come up against more formidable opponents, the like of which he has never seen or known. I wish I could tell you what happens, but I can't." - Tom Hiddleston

"If you are gentle with yourself and allow yourself to pace the healing process in small, slow steps, you can free yourself from the hold the past has had on you. We'll explore ways to slow yourself down, ways to pace your exploration and discovery that allow you to validate your right to be treated with respect, especially by yourself.

"A theme that comes up often in therapy with survivors of childhood abuse is the slower you go, the faster you get there. There is a great deal of wisdom in this simple statement. Because abuse creates feelings of being overwhelmed, it's not unusual for survivors to move into high gear and overwhelm themselves as part of their recovery process. While it's understandable that you want to be free of the pain and struggle that may characterize your present life, going slowly will allow you to learn how it feels to respect your needs for safety. You'll have a chance to experience mastery, to go through a natural process of absorbing new information at your own pace, a pace you can manage.

"...It's also important to know that you can choose to have moments away from the healing process. Healing goes on even if you're having a good time doing something else, or a quiet time with a good book, or a blank time staring at the television set. That deep place in your psyche, the part of you that always seeks to heal, carries on the process no matter what you're doing. It's your decision to heal that matters. Once that is made, the process carries itself along."

There is hardly a major British institution that was left untouched by fascism, from the Bank of England to the Daily Mail to the House of Commons. Just as today there is hardly any other country that has so revelled in the glamorisation and persistence of feudal structures and their pursuit of mastery and luxury. If there is a story to be told about Britain and fascism, let it be this: while the people of Britain stood up to the Nazis, the British ruling class were in many cases enthusiastic collaborators – and found justification for being so in their own aristocratic roots and worldviews.

some people only approach and understand polyamory as a weird kink and not like. regular ass family planning. financial interdependence, fair allocation of resources, sharing household labor, healthcare, child-rearing if that's in the cards for you.

there's nothing wrong with casual sex, i love casual sex. people get really stuck on the casual sex though. sometimes it's "sex is evil for (x) reason" that creates the stigma around polyamory. sometimes people jump in without know what they're doing and have no hard relationship skills, or notice the community here has the same problems the larger culture has.

it's not really a sex thing, dating more than one person. you don't even need to have sex with your partners to be polyam. some people just have different family structures. a system strictly structured around american individualism and the nuclear family enables abusers and alienation.

As a gender nonconforming cis dyke, I've received a lot of weird hostility in bathrooms. Like, a lot. The mild but frequent stuff is when people see me, do a visible double take, and go check the sign again. The not entirely common, more aggressive stuff is when people verbally question why I'm there. More than once I've had someone call me "it" or confront me about my gender in public settings. I've had people try to tell me to leave.

But the only place I've had someone physically try to remove me from a bathroom was in London.

Some random middle aged woman thought that she had the right to put her hands on me simply because I don't match her ideas of what femininity is, and I don't think it's a coincidence that this happened in a place where transphobia is running rampant. Of all the weird stuff that's happened to me in pretty conservative parts of the US, they simply are not as emboldened here as they currently are in the UK; but don't think for a moment that they don't intend to get there.

Trans people are reason enough to fight these bigots. It's a good enough reason. Trans people deserve respect, dignity, compassion, and protection. But if you think they'll be satisfied with only pushing trans people back into the closet, you're utterly deluded. They want absolute conformity, simple as that, and they're increasing their push here too.

Any lesbian who aligns herself with transphobia is a traitor. Simple as that.

I took my meds too close to bedtime again and I need you all to know the dream I had last night involved Robin Williams becoming the new Defense Against The Dark Arts teacher at Hogwarts. Not, a character portrayed by Robin Williams, just Robin Williams as himself running around Hogwarts doing wandless magic and being as loud and big as possible because and I quote before I forget:

“Listen, children, I’m not saying all this bad shit that is happening isn’t scary and you shouldn’t be concerned–because you should!–but I’m telling you this now for free. Life is a boggart, it’s the biggest boggart of them all. You never know what it’s going to look like one moment to the next. And sometimes you just gotta laugh. It’s okay to laugh. It’s part of the grieving process. You need to grieve before you can heal. But it’s okay to laugh while you’re doing it.”

I didn’t wake up right after that, some more stuff happened in a hazy sort of way as the dream began to dissolve into conciousness, but I remember him yelling Expecto Patronum as he punched a Death Eater in the face. Because sometimes, evidently, you have to make your own happy memories.

Men: Your Consent Matters Too

Fellas, listen.

You don't have to do anything sexual that you're not interested in. Moreover, you don't have to explain why. "No" is a complete sentence.

Not interested in getting pegged? You don't have to.
Monogamous and not into the idea of another partner? Okay.
Not sure about period sex? Cool.

And if your partner decides to question or mock your maturity or your masculinity or your sexuality because you say no? It's time to re-evaluate the relationship. See if you don't deserve better than that.

Just thought I'd leave this here.

If i remember correctly, character designer responsible for her said that Perfuma was designed with the intent of being trans, but by the time it was clear that they would've been able to get that on Netflix, she had already been cast with a cis actress and they didn't want to have weak representation of saying it after the fact. Later cast additions Double Trouble (nonbinary) and Jewelstar (transgender man) are both canon in-fiction and played by trans/NB voice actors.

Being hyper critical of a show that is doing its best for minority representation does nothing to help that they did try. They are paving the way for the next cartoon / or any media in general. Please pass on the message as you see fit.

It truly was. In fact, I wrote this post shortly after, but couldn't get into any details. It's about Tom.

The most inspiring day I've had in my career

I'm going to preface this story by saying I won't be naming the production (but it's a big, big one) and I won't be naming the star (though they are a big, big one). I also want to say that I'm not a star by any stretch. While I've had some success and I have some good credits, I'm still a day player, booking small(er) roles.

I just got off set, wrapping a role in the largest production I've ever been a part of. It wasn't a big role, but one integral to the story and I was working with the lead.

The first day of my shoot, I met the star in passing and they were very friendly. They stopped, introduced themselves, and we had a brief, but nice conversation.

Today was the first day we worked together and it was just the two of us in the scene. We shot their single first (over my shoulder) and it went very well. They were improvising, which led me to improvise, the director loved it, and we had good chemistry together.

We finished their single and then the camera had to turn around to do mine. In between, they needed to shoot another shot with the lead that I wasn't in. Unfortunately, this shot took longer than expected. Once finished, the director and 1st AD came up to me, very apologetically, and told me that the other shot went long and that the star had to do a big costume and makeup change, and because time was getting short, I would need to work with a stand-in to do my single.

Like I said, I'm not a named talent and it wasn't a big deal to me, so I was like sure, that's not an issue. They were very thankful and expressed gratitude for me being flexible.

About 5 minutes later, the star comes walking by my chair and stops. They say they just heard that they're not going to be able to work with me for my single. Honest to god, I totally expected them to say, "I wish I could, but..." or "we're on such a tight schedule, so...", which would've been fine. I was totally ok with it. But that's not what they said.

They said, I'm not going to let this happen. I need to be there for you and I'm going to fight for it. I'm going to rush and get through wardrobe/makeup so that I can shoot with you.

I was blown away.

They ran off and 20 minutes later when they had the set ready, the star jumped in and was ready to work. We shot the scene, found some amazing moments along the way, and it was fantastic.

It was hands down the best, most inspiring thing that's happened to me in my, albeit short, career. I thanked them for doing what they did and how cool it was for them to do it. They just looked at me and said, "hey, we gotta stick together, right?" It was a reminder that no matter how big you get, it's about doing good work and helping lift others up.

Today is a day I'll never forget.

Dhxjsjxhdhshdhd I love my bf so much he just said "hey do you ever see a picture that changes your life forever" and then showed me a photo of a loaf of bread shaped like a crocodile

androgynosaurus Follow

in case you were curious this is the photo and yes, my life has significantly changed for the better after seeing it

[Image ID: a photo of a glass display in a bakery, in which five large and exquisitely crafted crocodile-shaped loaves of bread are stacked up. End ID]

rurascarlet Follow

I think the picture takes place in Vietnam, from what I can parse from the "Mr. Thınh" poster in the bg. HOWEVER I would like to do small infodump on my culture.

Crocodile bread is actually very important in Batavian weddings (people of Jakarta; endonym "Betawi"). It symbolizes loyalty and strength in marriage— and traditionally, crocodiles are regarded as very patient animals (stays and waits instead of chasing prey) and it reflects how love requires patience and how it needs to come naturally. It also symbolized riches at one point, but the specific records of that are unfortunately lost to time like the proper Batavian language (thanks 300 years of colonization).

These days it's unpopular because of the rise of "modern" weddings that only have the ceremony, food, and party. Not to say that that's bad but the simple symbolic breaking of bread between the two families straight up doesn't happen often anymore and whenever a mini one (mini ones for the guests) gets sent to my house I go "oh yeah!!!! hometown culture!!!!!!!" and then I get sad over forgetting it in the first place.

Anyway. Culture good, want more.

“sex segregated restrooms were invented for a reason!”

the reason:

But for the most part, public facilities in Western nations were male-only until the Victorian era, which meant women had to improvise. If they had to be out and about longer than they could hold their bladders, women in the Victorian era would urinate over a gutter (long Victorian skirts allowed for some privacy). Some would even carry a small personal device called a urinette that they could use discretely under their skirts and then pour out, Cavanagh said. Strangely, these urinettes were sometimes shaped like the male genitals. [How Much Urine Can a Healthy Bladder Hold?]

This lack of female facilities reflected a notable attitude about women: that they should stay home. This "urinary leash" remains a problem in some developing

showmethesneer Follow

So basically public restrooms have always presented an issue of exercising control over marginalized people. Anti-trans bathroom bills are just another form of “urinary leash”

If there are no bathrooms yiu can feel safe in while you are in public areas, you will not feel comfortable in public and bigots will not have to confront the reality of your existence.

How fucking horrifying and cruel.

And even this isn't as long as it looks, because like I mention in a other post, the tongue begins at the front rather than the back of their mouth. What's actually cool and unique about it is that it therefore has to fold backwards to fit inside the mouth and flips forward to catch bugs. There aren't perfectly clear photos of that so here's more doodles:

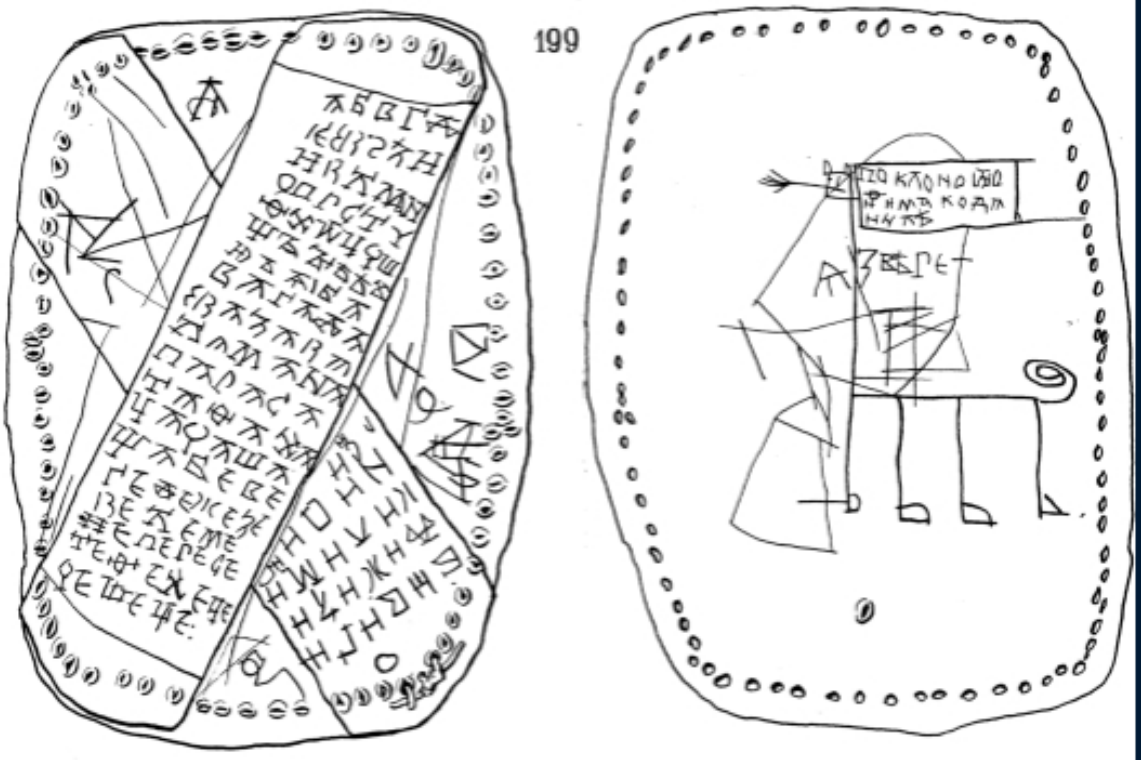
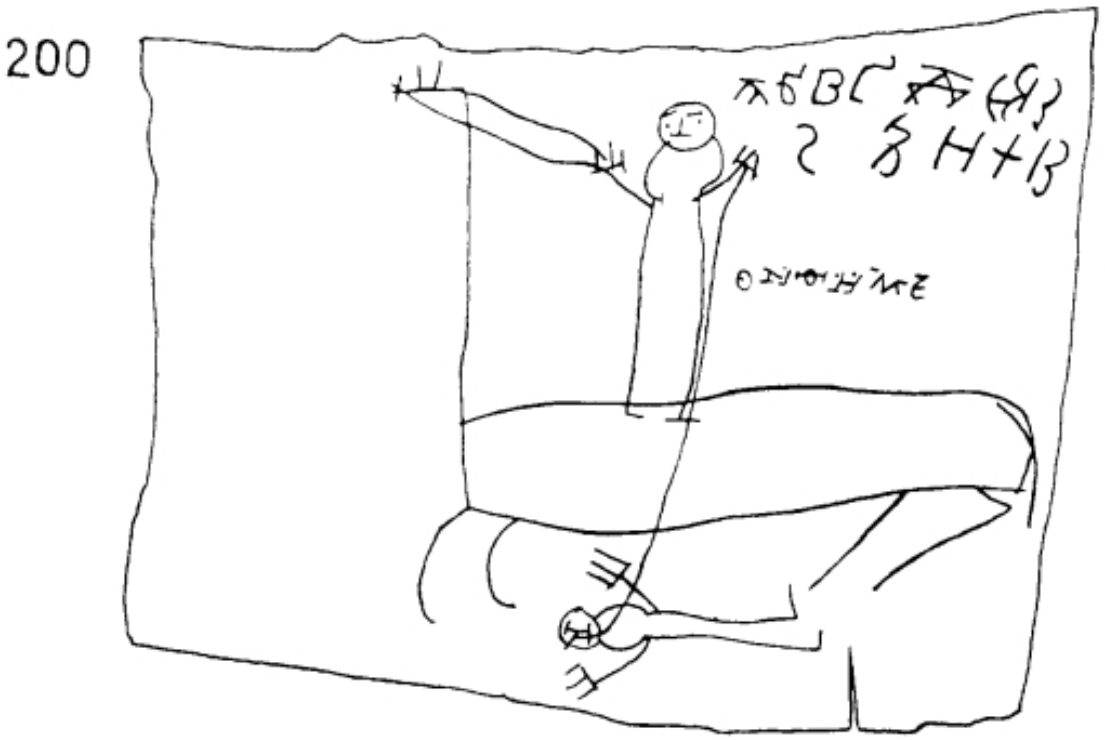
Somewhat related but a thing i love is that we have historical artifacts of this everyday imagination which i find absolutely delightful.

This is Onfim and his dad. Onfim lived in Novgorod in what is today Russia during the 13th century, and was 6-7 when he drew this by scratching into soft birch bark. Some of the things he wrote was his language, Old Novgorodian. And Onfim also had just as delightful an imagination as todays children.



On the left is his writing homework, and on the right a creature labeled as “I am a wild beast” (an artistic depiction of a wild animal? Or a creature purely of fantasy?)



Here’s a battle scene, the rider helpfully labeled as “Onfim”, leaving no doubts that he definitively fantasized about being a noble knight

...How the fuck is woebot more effective than the last three human CBT therapists I've had...?

december-rains Follow

what's woebot?

myautisticpov Follow

It's an app where the AI walks you through CBT.

How To ADHD mentioned it in their last video, and I was having a middle of the night panic attack, so I downloaded it, and yeah... My first CBT therapist was good and helped lay the foundations for me doing CBT, but every time I've been referred since (usually when my stress gets too high for me to effectively do CBT on command), the therapist has stuck to a rote script that assumes that I don't already know CBT and been extremely dismissive of my ADHD and autism, and that's gotten in the way of me being able to refresh my CBT.

The AI also sticks to a rote script, but it's a good script, and there's something about it being an AI that takes away the "this person isn't listening to me" frustration, because it's a robot, it physically can't do anything except the CBT with me.

kailthia Follow

If you've had trouble with therapists being crap with adhd and autism issues, and not listening to you generally, I'd say that you weren't seeing the sort of therapist that was right for you.

From my own experience, shopping around for therapists is super-helpful. Annoying to do, but the results are good if you can find someone that suits. So for your situation, someone who knows you've done therapy before and are familiar with the basics of CBT, and someone who's at least decent with adhd and autism stuff.

And a therapist doesn't have to be massively experienced with adhd and autism stuff to be good with it. Mostly it's a question of outlook and stuff. Also, I've been lucky in that psychologists I've dealt with are like "what parts of autism and adhd that affect you do you want to work on to improve your daily life," so I can be like "I am shit at dealing with people and want to be able to concentrate more" so we can work on that.

myautisticpov Follow

That's super good advice for people who can follow it!

Unfortunately, mental health services are severely underfunded where I live, so there is no way to shop around for a therapist through the NHS.

Basically, when you're at breaking point, your GP will refer you to the local mental health services and you'll only ever be offered 12 weeks of CBT or mindfulness, which you'll have to wait 9-18 months to start.

So, even if you find a good therapist, if your 12 weeks end (over a year after you were referred) and you're not still in absolute crisis mode, they will discharge you, and there's no guarantee of getting the same therapist next time.

If I want to shop around and find someone who suits me - and get therapy for more than 12 weeks at a time every few years when I'm having a breakdown - I'll have to go private, which I can't afford. And because we have the NHS, we don't have as many of the options available in the US for cheaper private therapy.

I know that what I need is probably specialist ADHD therapy/coaching with someone who understands autism, and perhaps a dash of trauma therapy, but when the ADHD clinic diagnosed me and asked what treatment I wanted, I was like "ideally ADHD-specific therapy and pills" they were just like "well, we can do the pills..."

kipplekipple Follow

Look for local autism services!!! This is NOT everywhere in the UK and I absolutely believe you when you probably tell me it doesn't exist or isn't functional where you are (but this info may be useful for someone else). I've been lucky in that both the last place I lived, and my current city have excellent (for the currently grossly underfunded NHS) autism services. But also, the people from the last city gave me all the information I needed to find it here.

But if there IS an autism support service (some of them are called outdated terms like Aspergers support but stick with me) they may provide therapists who are in fact trained to work with autistic people, or if they are not then at least who are experienced and/or have the right mindset. The waiting list is still incredibly long though.

I do want to say that CBT for people who are autistic and/or ADHD looks a bit different and that it is known regular CBT doesn't work for us, but really all you need is a therapist who works with their patients rather than tries to cram you into a cutlery organiser when you are, in fact, a ladle.

myautisticpov Follow

Yeah, my ADHD clinic is also the autism service, they pretty much just do diagnosis and medication monitoring. For ADHD, you get meds, and for autism, you get a reading list, and that's it after you're diagnosed. Every search for other local services just brings up charities for "families living with autism".

Yeah, CBT can help with my absolute worst moments of having panic attacks because my brain has run away with something, but only when it's with a therapist who is at least willing to learn about autism/ADHD. Or whose response to trauma is something other than

"wow, huh, maybe you should just avoid dealing with the aftermath of that, it sounds like it stresses you out."

a-polite-melody Follow

There's something else here that's stuck out to me, mostly because it's something I deal with in Canada as well and is the biggest barrier in getting actually helpful therapy for me, "you'll only ever be offered ... CBT or mindfulness."

There are other therapies that exist beyond CBT and mindfulness. Those two types of therapies can be actively bad for some people. They don't get offered anything else, unless they have the money to go private.

CBT has always kinda screwed with my head, and after some of the trauma that's happened to me as an adult, CBT majorly screws with my head. Other forms of therapy would be more beneficial to me (DBT being the one I've looked into the most). But, regardless of that, the only therapy I can get that would be covered by the government is CBT.

There are so many different things that act as barriers to people accessing the therapy they need. It's good to see apps like the one mentioned in this post starting to pop up to help make things at least a tiny bit more accessible. (And actually, I wonder if doing CBT with an AI rather than a person would work better for me. Might be worth a try.)

Despite Mr Biden's promise not to build "one more foot" of the wall, the fact that Congress has already allocated money to the project may force his hand to complete its construction.

Under the Impoundment Control Act, when Congress allocates money to a project, that project must be completed. The only exception to that law is if questions of efficiency arise or if a president submits a request to revoke the project.

mixingpumpkins Follow

Hey. Take it from a former HR person... this goes double right now.

I just spent some time putting in some job applications myself (not for HR, lol) and got about 15 interviews. And idk if it's because of COVID uncertainty or if places just don't fucking care anymore because they know people are desperate for work, but the amount of straight up illegal shit my interviewers asked me was appalling.

(That's not even counting the questions that were technically legal but clearly fishing for information they're not legally allowed to ask.)

A tame example? Two questions into a phone interview, the guy on the other end of the line asked: "How old are you?"

I said "Excuse me?" - giving him a chance to rethink that.

He didn't. "How old are you?"

"Sir, you are not allowed to ask me that question."

"Well, I want to know. I'm asking."

"And you're legally not allowed to ask me that. I'm not required to tell you my age."

At that point, I guess he managed to remember an old HR bulletin or something (I hope to god he wasn't actually HR himself), and he said, "Well, I need to know if you're over the age of 18." (Which is what he should have asked in the first place... or not, since that was in the application that he could have read.)

"Yes. I'm over the age of 18."

And we moved on. Two questions later, he tried another illegal question. I called him on it again and ended the interview, citing that a workplace with such a clear disregard for the law, especially upon first contact with a potential employee, was not going to be a good fit. (They offered me the job anyway, lol. I didn't send a thank-you or a response.)

At a different interview, the majority of questions were "fishing" questions - just looking for that info they're not actually allowed to ask. (This person was also either not really HR or an HR person who was exceptionally bad at their job.)

I could tell they were getting frustrated when I dodged answering the personal stuff, and they actually got extremely upset when I mentioned later in the interview (re: less relevant work experience) I had worked in HR. They were super flustered for the remainder of our time, and I watched them skip over questions on their sheet they had clearly planned on asking. They KNEW they were being sketchy and were counting on me not knowing anything about HR - or my rights - and so they got upset when I did.

These were super tame examples. I'm begging you, if you're job searching right now, PLEASE know your rights. Please know what interviewers are allowed to ask.

Please don't volunteer information or elaborate more than you're required to about personal things. Save your words (and everyone's time) by elaborating why you're good for the position/what you can do.

I may create a resource list on this shit later but PLEASE PLEASE KNOW THIS STUFF BEFORE YOU TALK TO AN EMPLOYER. This goes for anywhere you're interviewing as well as your current employer. This also goes for HR. HR may be the person you go to when shitty stuff happens, but that doesn't mean they're your friend (or competent).

They don't need to know your age (beyond 16+, 18+, or 21+, depending on the job). They don't need to know your medical history. (For the love of god, do NOT answer the "have you been diagnosed with depression?" question.) They don't need to know if you have kids or whatever. They don't need to know a LOT of those things that may appear on an application, including your veteran status, whether you're on/have been on unemployment, etc. They're not entitled to know specifics about your transportation (unless you're using that transportation for the job, like Uber/delivery drivers). Look this up for your state/the job's state.

Beware questions like "What year did you graduate?" if you're like me and don't put dates on your resume (I just put amount of time spent at employers, not dates of employment). They're fishing for your age. It's "Oh, you know, 100 years ago," if you feel comfortable making a joke, or "About [generic number, like 5 or 10] years ago" if not.

Also beware things like the "What do you do in your free time?" question, even if you already work there. This is not a friendly getting-to-know-you question. This is a basis for judgement. Not up to an invisible standard? They're going to be biased against you for pay raises, promotions, etc. Mention kids/lots of family/social engagements? That's a tick against you for not being the kind of person who lives to work (yes, it's gross and stupid). Mention lots of solitary things? Cool, that's their mental note to ask more from you because you're "not doing anything anyway." By all means, be friendly with your coworkers/talk about shared interests if you want, but it is none of your boss's business, and be aware what could get back to them.

Don't. Tell. Employers. Shit.

"Gentle reminder that growing up with 'the right opinions' is a privilege that not everyone has. I was lucky enough to grow up in a super progressive, open minded family, area and community, and I was taught tolerance and kindness before I could even think for myself.

Not everyone gets that privilege.

No one is born with opinions, and your ideals will most likely be dictated by what your parents and the people around you think, at least until you're old enough to make up your own mind. When that happens, you might get lucky and find that you agree with everything you've been taught, or you might have to reject it. The latter is a process that should never be taken for granted. It is hard and it involves questioning your entire worldview.

I've been active in political circles for years, and so many of our members come from conservative upbringings. I respect each and every one of them, and the views they used to hold only make them more valuable allies, because I know they have had to work to change as people.

If we started to reject people — especially young people — based on their past beliefs, we would barely get to keep any members at all. People are allowed to grow and change."

No, under socialism you lose freedom of speech and get sent to the untended, unsanitary, rapey shithouse mental institution against your will because a "vigilant citizen" overheard (read: spied on) you speak anti-socialist propaganda.

Stop romanticizing the socialist regime. Take it from a bitch who lived during socialist times.

I hate capitalism just as much but it has tonnes more freedoms and liberties and just plain personal mobility than socialism ever could, more inclusion.

You know what socialism does with disabled people? It locks them up in nuthouses and throws away the key. Same with LGBTQIA+ people Gay? You go to jail.

Spirituality in any form is prohibited, christianity included.

Socialist citizens serve one purpose and one purpose only: work for the socialist glory! Get married with an opposite sex person and make babies for socialism! Abortion is a crime they put you in jail for forever. Or send you to the canals to work you to death.

You get state issued socialist propaganda tv for 2 h a day and that's it.

I could go on and on with how horrible socialism is. The national security agency is everywhere, watching, listening, bugging your miniature standard issued socialist flat where you and your 4 other sisters live. Parks are practically gone, there is nothing but grey matchbox buildings everywhere.

Your mother gives you schnitel made from bologna with bread and milk. This is all the socialists give the worm-people.

Dont get me started on socialism.

During the late 1950s and 1960s, it is estimated that the Soviet Union had some of the highest abortion rates in the world. The abortion rate during this period is not known for sure, because the Soviet Union did not start releasing abortion statistics until perestroika. The best estimates, which are based on surveys of medical professionals during this time, say that about 6 to 7 million abortions were performed per year.[25]

That was one of my favorite scenes to play.

The breaking glass scene was one of the more significant scenes of Season One as its symbolism was vitally important in understanding what was happening to Eve. Sandra had to fight for that scene to stay in, and we're all fortunate that she did.

Artist Spotlight: Laura June Kirsch

Laura has had a love for photography since the age of five. She has been active on Tumblr for twelve years now and has captured many raw moments for us at multiple events throughout those years. She's been working on a book for over a decade, and the time has finally come to release it into the world! We checked in with Laura to tell us about her book, advice she has for young photographers, and her love for Tumblr. Check it out.

When did you realize that photography was something you wanted to do professionally?

I've always loved photography; it is a passion of mine. I've been shooting since age five and majored in photography at SVA. The plan was to work in music, but when I graduated, the recession hit, and getting a job was tough. I did not get one full-time job I applied for! As social media boomed, more photographers and content were needed, and I naturally started getting hired for these jobs. I didn't think I could get work as a photographer—it was a happy accident that it worked out as my career.

Has evolving technology changed your process at all?

Outside of the digital shift from film (I held onto film as long as I could), not much, honestly! The sharing of photography and presenting of work has changed, though, for sure.

What brings you satisfaction in your work?

I love connecting with people and capturing raw/honest moments. When I get that perfect "decisive moment," it's a great feeling. Revisiting a great photograph never gets old for me.

What's been the most challenging part of publishing a book?

When I first started shopping this project around in 2019, I was told a lot of discouraging things that I eventually ignored—like that I would need to have a major celebrity writer attached to the book and a huge Instagram following to get a publisher. I assumed you would land a publisher, and the writers would come later in the project. It all seemed like a crazy roadblock—how would an average person procure a celebrity for a project with no publisher? My book is all about the people at events, and celebrity culture is so far removed from my work and lifestyle.

The mass Instagram followers expectation drives me nuts. It's a bummer people focus on that for evaluating work. It's no secret that a large portion of creatives buys their followers, and I won't play that game. Authenticity is key to me, and paying for a faux following negates that completely. It's never crossed my mind to go that route. I think the whole public display of these interactions is bad for mental health and society overall. It's very "Black Mirror."

One thing I love about TUMBLR is how they don't show those numbers and keep it about the content and community. I wish other platforms would follow this model. Ironically, I have a huge following on this platform.

Eventually, I followed my heart and started looking for a publisher sans celebrity or massive IG audience. My awesome publisher, Hat & Beard Press, saw the potential in the work and how passionate I was about this project and the communities portrayed in it. That's what should matter in an art project! Stay true to who you are, and don't let anybody stop you from speaking your truth.

What advice would you give to aspiring photographers?

Be yourself and go with your gut. The second you start doing things to go with the status quo, you lose yourself. Make sure you are making work that you love, not what you think other people will love. You deserve to get paid. Don't be afraid to say no to jobs that think otherwise. Walking away is the hardest but most important thing without proper compensation. Taking pictures is a job and a skill; clients are acquiring intellectual property. That is valuable, and so are you!

What are you most proud of?

I am most proud of this book! This has been a dream of mine since my high school photography class. I started shooting this project in 2008 and editing it down in 2016. It's been 13 years in the making. I am so happy with how it shaped out and can't wait for the world to see it. The amount of time and energy put into this book is insane. The term "labor of love" has taken on a completely new meaning. So yes, I am very proud of this and staying true to my vision.

You can pre-order Romantic Lowlife Fantasies right here!

This interview has been condensed for clarity.

Sometimes I remember that Supernatural writers are so bad at their jobs that they accidentally made it canonically impossible for Dean to be John's son

oh-in-italics Follow

Okay okay this is for the (2) people who asked for this and those two people specifically. So in season 2, we see a John's dog tags. These dog tags demonstrate that his blood type is AB. And in season 10, during the ritual to turn demon Dean human again, we learn that Dean's blood type is O+. Idk what you remember from 9th grade biology, but it's impossible for someone with AB blood to have a kid with O+ blood, meaning it is biologically impossible for Dean to be John's son.

France has always and I mean ALWAYS had a history of Islamophobia...but, for those of you who don't know what's going on right now:

- They're trying to ban the slaughter of Halal chicken, citing animal cruelty and claiming Halal (I believe they also discussed Kosher) methods of slaughter are unethical compared to the European practice of stunning the animal (the Halal way of slaughter would be a cut to the jugular vein so that the animal feels no pain).
- They then proceeded to ban the wearing of the Hijab (the Muslim headscarf) for girls under 18 in public places.
- They also banned Hijabi mothers (women who wear the Hijab) from accompanying their child on school field trips.
- Furthermore, they banned the Burkini (a swimsuit that a lot of Muslim women wear) at public swimming pools.

These restrictions (I have definitely not covered a lot of them) fall under France's Separatism Bill which still needs to be passed by the National Assembly. France maintains that these actions are to uphold secularism (the separation of religion and state).

However, these targeted laws and the statements accompanying them...

- The Hijab ban was the "prohibition in the public space of any conspicuous religious sign by minors and of any dress or clothing which would signify an interiorization of women over men." This is a commonly used trope about Islam and Muslim men; that they are oppressive of women which is absolutely not true...take it from a Muslim woman! 🧕
- Emmanuel Macron said that Hijab is "not in accordance with French ideals". This again alludes to the misconception that Hijab is oppressive and that by taking it away, we are liberating women. I don't deny that there are women who had Hijab forced upon them, but what France is not acknowledging is that the forcing of any religious action upon people is completely the opposite of Islamic teachings and that there are actually women out there who can make decisions about what they want to wear...Surprise! It may come as a bit of a shock to them...

...just showcase how deeply rooted these laws are in Islamophobia and how France is maximizing restrictions on daily Muslim life just to...be a white saviour?

There are five million Muslims in France right now and they are all being affected by this.

from Jessica Price on Twitter: "As people from non-Christian backgrounds/traditions/cultures keep telling everyone, the western idea of a "nonreligious" society is a white Christian society with the serial numbers filed off."

Full thread here that explains why culturally Christian countries claiming that only they are the arbiters of what's "religious" or not is discriminatory and nonsensical and anti-pluralist.

also, from Just Say Christian: "The thing about describing countries or people as being completely devoid of religious association by calling them 'secular' is that 'secular' is, itself, a term originating within Christianity, based on Christian texts and connoting a Christian perspective on religion." also a thread there.

ecrivainsolitaire Follow

People who haven't broken out of religion really don't understand what it does to your brain huh

They haven't experienced the trauma of realising that everything you believed about the universe was a lie

That you have been told you have free will while at the same time the same people are teaching you a set of values that they claim is morally, objectively good while in reality is just an indirect way to control your body while dismissing your consent.

That your clothes are intrinsically tied to your beliefs and that those beliefs have been implanted by a foreign policing body.

Of course they consent to it. I consented to throwing away my jewellery because being effeminate was a bad thing. I consented to cutting my hair because it was dishonourable and shameful to keep it long. I consented to never dancing, never using my body for any sort of pleasure, never even thinking about it, because it was a sentence of shunning, loss of rights, embarrassment, condemnation and forced marriage to even think about it.

I consented because my entire understanding of reality was forged from birth by people who wanted to control every aspect of my life and made sure I had a deadly fear of disobedience.

It's very easy to consent to things, to even praise them and learn to enjoy them, when the universe you live in does not match material reality.

Those who haven't dropped their chains, and those who never had them, cannot possibly understand the weight they put on their bodies.

If you want to know if the hijab is oppressive, you don't ask the Muslims. You ask the ex-muslims. Ask if they still like to wear them, ask if they feel liberated by them. I might be very wrong, it might be very different to my experience, but chances are it's not.

I'm willing to ask and be proven wrong. Are you?

prismatic-bell

"I might be very wrong"

You are.

You are insinuating that the only correct way to experience the world is atheism, as seen through the lens of your own religious trauma. Which is one way to see the world, and a sad-but-true one for a lot of people (trauma sucks), but it isn't the only way.

If you want to know if something is liberating, YOU ACCEPT THAT DIFFERENT PEOPLE WILL FIND DIFFERENT THINGS LIBERATING BASED ON THE FACT THAT THEY HAVE DIFFERENT EXPERIENCES.

Frankly I don't understand how you can follow me, a religious person, and also spout this self-righteous drivel. I'd think you'd find very little of interest on my blog if you insist on looking at the world through this lens, and frankly I find it insulting.

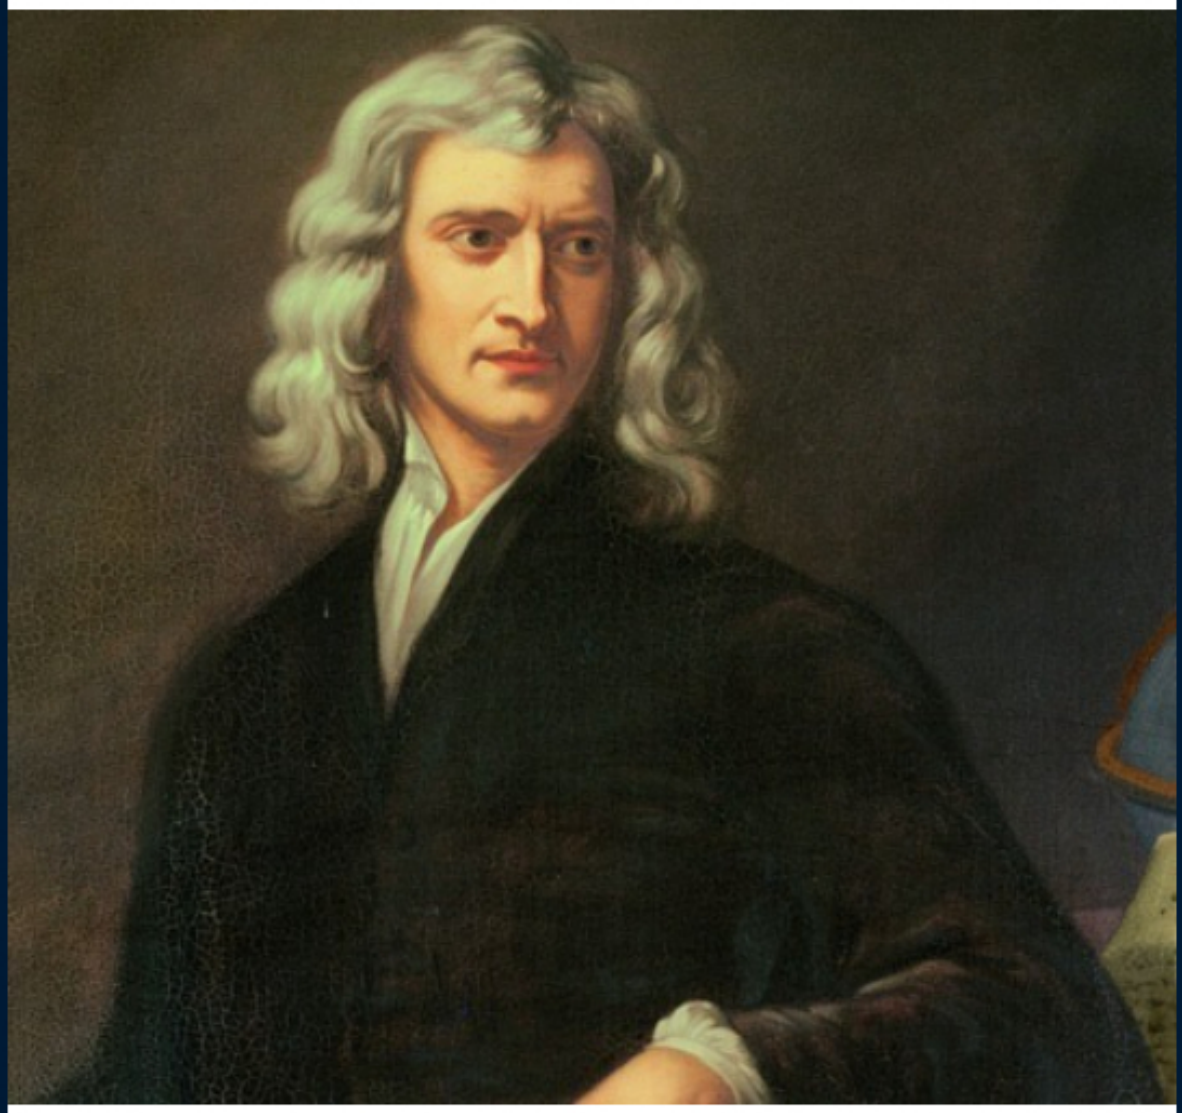
Its International Asexuality Day



Sir Issac Newton was one of history's most prolific mathematicians. While most famous for his work on gravity, he is credited with dozens of discoveries from the foundations of physics, to economics, to calculus, to optics, to thermodynamics. We owe much of this work to his occult studies. Armed with a recently invented scientific method, Newton methodically tested the ideas of mystics and alchemists throughout history, separating mysticism from useful science. In occult circles, he is often referred to as "The Last Alchemist" occult circles, he is often referred to as "The Last Alchemist"

While it is difficult and frequently ahistorical to apply modern LGBT language to historical figures, Newton is widely believed to be completely asexual. French philosopher Voltaire, who attended Newton's funeral in London, said that he "was never sensible to any passion, was not subject to the common frailties of mankind, nor had he any commerce with women."

oi-lucy Follow

His letters say otherwise. Tesla on the other hand, he loved those pigeons so much.

normal-horoscopes Follow

This is what I mean by ahistorical. His relationship with Nicolas Fatio de Dullier was close and affectionate, but not necessarily romantic. You have to remember that modern western society is extremely chaste when it comes to friendships compared to newton's time.

Additionally, you can be gay and asexual.

normal-horoscopes Follow

Y'all he constantly and repeatedly talked about being either nonplussed or outright repulsed by anything sexual. Multiple contemporaries of his corroborated that he likely died a virgin. Dude didn't fuck.

ecrivainsolitaire Follow

No, he said he had never known a woman.

Asexual discourse is valid, but a lot of straight allosexual homophobes have a nasty habit of using it as a dogwhistle in order to erase non-straightness.

As for evidence he was into men, he shared chambers with both his assistants, financed their studies, and had a terrible falling out with the first one that affected him greatly. Which isn't definitive, of course, but it's not nothing, and it's not okay to pretend that there's no way he could've ever thought of it.

Look into "celibate geniuses" of history and you'll be surprised how often you find straightwashing.

The feedback loop can be vicious, and it serves up some wild and peculiar hot takes. Of all the things I'd been accused of throughout my life, not being gay enough was never one I saw coming.

My initial reaction was disbelief. I'd been getting death threats. Was having to install a special security system on my house so I didn't get murdered in the night by people who hated me simply because of my marriage not gay enough? Could someone send me the checklist? Was there a meeting I missed out on? Surely, I thought, at least I'd get some points for, you know, being married to a man.

Peter, thank goodness, has such thick skin; nothing riles him up. In our five years together I've heard him raise his voice a handful of times, and every time it was because Truman tore into the trash and spread coffee grounds around the house. Peter has been doing this forever and just moves on. He is also not one to return shittiness with shittiness—something I admire and envy him for. He's also well-versed in leftist ideology because he reads everything—he was familiar with the kinds of theoretical critiques being thrown at us. But this was very new for me. I've been profoundly shaped by my past. Living in my car, as one of those suicidal gay teenagers everyone loves to talk about protecting, is the experience that has most impacted my perspective and my image of my hard-won queerness. But for some, because I wore chinos and a button-down on the cover of Time, and hold similar but not identical opinions to some people on social media, this trauma is not sufficient.

> Promoting a positive message about the campaign could sometimes feel like an uphill battle, and that was without all the nonsense that was thrown at us from both ends of the political spectrum. (There were some people who claimed Peter and I weren't actually married, or even gay. And Peter had somehow single-handedly fixed Canadian bread prices at the age of twenty-six as an entry-level associate at a consulting firm. Oh, and he was also a secret CIA operative waiting for his turn to overtake the Democratic Party, while cleverly disguised as an intelligence officer in the Navy, while also serving as… the mayor of South Bend, Indiana?) Being a public figure today means that anyone, anywhere, can make up anything they want about you and promote it as if it's true, as if they have some secret knowledge. And the nature of the beast is that there are a lot of people who desperately want to believe things that aren't true.

I wonder if the dirtbag left™ is proud or ashamed they got a public callout in Chasten Buttigieg's book.

prismatic-bell

"Because I.....hold similar but not identical opinions to some people on social media...."

This is important.

I think Buttgeig is a politician with some shitty views, and it's likely that never the Twain shall meet between mine and his. But that doesn't make him any less gay. It makes him a gay man with shitty views.

You never showed up before.

I'm sure I'm going to get yelled at or tone-policed for this post, so let's start here: spare your fucking breath.

But if you feel you must rant back at me, read the whole fucking post first.

A few years ago, Black Harry Potter fans pointed out the lack of Black characters in the books. If memory serves me, there are two– Kingsley Shacklebolt and Blaise Zabini. One is a Death Eater. The other one is literally a man named after a kind of prison chain. And fans went "well Jo supports Black Hermione headcanons and she was played onstage by a Black girl!"

A few years ago, Black readers expressed concern over how Rowling portrayed S.P.E.W., and the concept of house elves being slaves. People dismissed this as being because the house elves are based on the folkloric brownies–and while this is true, there was absolutely no attempt to show why Hermione was wrong beyond "lol silly girl, wanting to free the house elves," nor was any attempt made to show why the treatment of Dobby and Winky was wrong beyond "well their masters were Slytherins what can you expect." Black readers' concerns were dismissed.

And a few years ago–around the release of Cursed Child was the first time I encountered it–Black fans pointed out that Lavender Brown was Black in the movies ... until she became Ron's love interest and was recast as a while girl. People got kind of mad and then forgot about it.

Over a decade ago, Jews pointed out that the goblins were antisemitic stereotypes. They were largely ignored. More recently, these pointings-out have been gaslit, ahistorically waved away, or the critics have been threatened.

About four years ago, I wrote a piece about why Snape is an antisemitic stereotype, and why, while he's fascinating as a character, his narrative is extremely concerning within the context of being framed as Jewish-coded. I was largely ignored, except by Jews. I was still a gentile at the time and even so I was told by other gentiles that I was imagining things–or that I was the one stereotyping Jews by recognizing the negative stereotypes in the work, so maybe I was the bigot, huh, how about that.

A couple of years ago, someone actually took Rowling to task on Twitter about there being no Jews in the books. Her reply was "there are plenty! Anthony Goldstein is Jewish!" Anthony has no spoken lines–his biggest interaction with any of the main cast is shooting Harry a dirty look–and his Jewishness is not mentioned or shown anywhere.

I can't be sure when I started seeing this, but as a onetime Harry Potter fan myself, I can say for sure it was within a year of Deathly Hallows the book coming out: criticism of the fact that the only gay character in the books turned out to be a master manipulator who was in love with a Hitler parallel, was in charge of children, and was actively grooming a young boy. (Later criticisms have been angry that Dumbledore was never mentioned as gay in the books. On that one, I have to give Rowling a very begrudging pass–even if she'd found a way to bring it up, in 2007 it would have been censored right back out.) And yet other than the occasional stray comment, that criticism has largely been ignored.

LGBT activists and gay men have been outraged since 1999 because Rowling stated that lycanthropy was supposed to be a corollary for AIDS. Ah, yes: because AIDS makes its victims turn into deadly, feral beasts once a month but causes absolutely zero other health problems, and it's most commonly spread by ill actors who know they're poz and deliberately infect others. Yep. Sounds accurate to me ... not.

Twenty years ago, Chinese-American readers and Chinese-British readers pointed out the racism inherent in the name "Cho Chang," which sounds quite close to the racial slur "ching-chong" (and also is not a real Chinese name). They were ignored. At best, their legitimate grievance was trotted out as a "tsk tsk" addendum when the focus on Rowling's anti-trans views started coming to light.

When the background lore for Fantastic Beasts came out, Native American readers were horrified by what Rowling did with their culture. I don't think I can even list all of their complaints here because they were so many, so myriad, and it's literally easier and more to the point to just say "she was lazy and clearly did not do a single line of research, ever, at all, and did not get anything right, at all, and in fact got a lot of things very offensively wrong." People got mad for about five minutes and then forgot all about it when the movie dropped.

Readers with ties to the African continent were also horrified, by the way, because supposedly there's one magical school for the tiny little islands of the UK and also one magical school for the biggest continent on earth. The many cultures, languages, and the basic geographic impossibility of this were all ignored by Rowling and her publishers–and fans, who got mad for five minutes and then forgot about it when the movie dropped.

When it came out that Nagini was some kind of snake woman, being played by a Korean actress, some fandomers pointed out that it was really fucking gross to have a Korean woman trapped by a man who then "impregnates" her with part of himself. Among other things, it's at best an unfortunate parallel with the Korean "comfort women" of WWII. (translation: Korean women who were raped and tortured by Japanese soldiers.) People got mad for about five minutes and then forgot about it.

At some point–again, Potter has been in my direct or periphery for such a long time that years start blending together–Rowling made a statement about how the reason there are no disabled people at Hogwarts is because they're "fixed" by magic. There was basically no outcry at all.

And now that Rowling's rabid anti-trans views have come to light, you want to pretend you never knew she was a terrible bigot.

You're showing up for trans women. As you should. Good job, have a gold star.

But do not forget, and do not give yourself a pass, that you never fucking showed up for the rest of us. You were passive and dismissive and justifying.

She is racist, ableist, queerphobic, and antisemitic. You have had a way to know this for twenty years. Even if you missed some of the early criticisms–I did, I was twelve years old and I fully recognize that many Potter readers aren't even as old as the series itself, I don't expect a five-year-old to have noticed this stuff–the evidence has piled up and piled up and piled up.

And only when it became a cause that's politically convenient did outrage begin.

Speak out for the trans women who have been and will be harmed by Rowling's recent drive off the cliff. Please do. I mean that genuinely. This is not okay.

But speak out for the rest of us too. Call her to task for EVERYTHING. Otherwise it's empty performative posturing.

Your activism must be intersectional. Or it's bullshit.

Just to remind people, it's okay if you didn't notice these things before, but if you're noticing them now, please speak up and say "this isn't right".

Honestly, the absolute mob coming after rowling for her 'transphobia' and not any of her other bigotry is a perfect case study of how the trans community claims oppression but in practice doesn't see it at a societal scale.

You had multiple communities voice concerns for bigger issues that are actually in the books and get crickets. Then in a book that is not only not in the HP series, but is even under a different pen name as well, she gets globally denounced for transphobia.

No other group that faces legitimate oppression gets this kind of backing, especially in the time frame that trans activism has been working in. JKR could send out a tweet using a racial slur tomorrow and people would probably still be talking about her 'transphobia' more.

If you have that amount of people in your corner, supporting an aspect of your lifestyle or identity, you are categorically NOT systemically oppressed.

tomblerfornow Follow

@prismatic-bell You can't just base a persons entire ideology on the books she writes. I won't adress the points about the native americans and only having one school on the african continent because I haven't read enough about it. And the point about Cho Changs name has been adressed by other people before.

Now there aren't only two black people. You't missing Angelina Johnson, Lee Jordan, and Dean Thomas. So with Blaise Zabini and Kingsley Hacklebolt that's five people (Still not a lot I know) And four out of five were very good people. Your point about Kingsley name made no sense but if that a good point to you he also has the word "king" in his name. And he became minister of magic. The Patel twins were also in the books and were probably from south east asia and likely had dark skin.

The houseelves are seen as a bad part of the wizard world by both Harry and Hermione. Hermione makes a big deal of it and Harry does thing it's a wrong system but he has other things to worry about throughout the entire series. People only make fun of Hermione because of the the way she is going about it.

After school she goes to work at the ministery of magic and fights for all magical creatures that are mistreated. Also Dobby is the only house elve we really have beside Winky who is only in one book and Dobby is a free elf and that is seen as a positive thing. He litterally shows of his freedom by wearing clothes all the time. Lastly there is no version of reality that is completely pure and good and people don't write about worlds like that because perfection isn't interesting.

Lavender Brown didn't have any lines in the movies until the sixth one and was probably played by an extra. I doubt she was recast because they didn't want her to be black.

Dumbledore wasn't grooming Harry (wtf?) and why would it be bad thing for a gay man to be in charge of children? What the hell are you inplying? You're right that JKR wouldn't have been able to make him an out and proud gay man but he was obviously gay. I'm pretty sure the word infatuation fell in the seventh book but I'm not sure. If it wasn't the way people talked about their relationship made it pretty clear to me that they were in love. If Dumbledore or Grindelwald had been a woman no one would think they were just friends. She also has written other books with gay characters in it.

JKR didn't say being a werewolf is the same as having aids??? She JKR didn't say being a werewolf is the same as having aids!!! She said that being a werewolf was surrounded by the same STIGMA as having aids is in the real world. Those are two very different things.

Goblins are a very popular creature that are put in many fantasy settings. I'm not jewish and if people say that they are antisemitic I believe that and I feel sorry that they are used so much but it's not something most people know about and therefore you can't assume JKR did it on purpose. She is very vocal about her support of jewish people so she deserves the benefit of doubt.

That's a lot of words to say "I support bigotry."

argentiaertheri Follow

It really is isn't it? I read the original post and did some mental gymnastics about how, afaik, she's only fairly recently started involving herself in real world stuff. Not that bigotry is ok, but I'm used to Tolkien and other (dead) authors where you kinda gotta back bend around some stuff. But you're right, how authors represent people matters, and I shouldn't ignore it with living authors the way I do with dead ones who really were "the product of their time".

The idea that trans women aren't oppressed because of the current outcry is, uh, backwards in a way that just screams TERF.

prismatic-bell

Yeah.

And like, there ARE some places I have to give her a pass because of the time period. If she'd tried to make Dumbledore gay on the page it would've been rejected by her publishing company and sent back for edits. (She MIGHT have gotten away with it by DH, but that's a very big "might.") I can't be 100% sure she knew Lavender had been previously cast.

But diverse casts were actually the RULE, not the exception, in the 1990s, and she began writing Potter in 1991. (When she had a small child, so it's not like she had no exposure to what was current.) The lily-whiteness of the cast and the awful way the few minority characters were treated becomes all the more glaring in light of this.

So this dude comes in my store tonight, and he's got the cutest and politest little girl with him. We start making cashier-talk, you know, like you do, and he starts talking about being a rapper. It's very clear he's a new artist and hustling for an audience, but rap is SO not my genre.

So if you guys want to possibly pick up some new favorite tunes, and support a small Black artist (with the most adorable child I have seen in weeks), check him out on YouTube. His name is Yung Pr!nce and he specifically recommended a song called Time.

All right so...did Hen once say that the way she knew about herself was because she wanted to kiss her best friend? Or am I imagining that? She had said that's how she explained it to her father, right? I was thinking Mama Hen knows. She's just waiting for the dense boys to realize. She was in the same boat once before and she's watching it before her eyes. One day and somehow I think it'll be Eddie asking, "how did you know? You know, that you liked women? I know I like women but..."

"Oh. It's simple," Hen smiled. "I wanted to kiss my best friend."

Eddie bites his lip; Hen could see the gears turning. "That simple, huh?" Suddenly, Buck is bouncing up the stairs.

"That simple," Hen repeated. Buck squinted his eyes at them but didn't think anything of it. Instead he asked Eddie, "Is it my turn to get food for game night or...?"

"Oh. Yeah. Game night," Eddie cleared his throat. "I think it's your turn."

"What if I cooked something?" He asked so nonchalant.

"So simple," Hen drawled. "Or maybe it's obvious. Or maybe it's just him," she whispered.

Eddie gave her a please be quiet look. She laughed. "What would you cook Buck?" She returned to their conversation.

"I don't know," he shrugged. "I've always wanted to give a go at Cap's Mac and cheese."

"Is that so?" Bobby said appearing from out of thin air.

"So can I have the recipe?" Buck eagerly asked.

"Why not?" Bobby found some pen and paper in the kitchen and got to writing. Buck hovered over his shoulder. No surprise there.

"Come on," said Hen to Eddie, still speaking in a low voice. "It's really laid out for you and I wasn't going to say anything until one or the both of you did. Go for it. Like I said I knew when I wanted to kiss my best friend. So what are you waiting for?"

Eddie slightly chuckled. What was he waiting for? Hen is telling the truth. So maybe he should just go for it?

It's really funny how, despite having never even dated, Eddie and Buck still manage to exude both married vibes (Buckley-Diaz family nights, Eddie's "don't you dare" look when Chris asks Buck for something against his wishes, etc) and divorcees-who-are-still-in-love-and-want-to-make-up vibes (the grocery store argument, Eddie coming home to Buck after his date with Ana, etc).

Good news! It would take Jeff Bezos 893 days to accrue the wealth to do this! That's just a little under 2 1/2 years. If we taxed him 50% we could solve this in five years and he could still buy 187 non-gold double decker buses a day.

Here's a legit answer:

Because HE DOESN'T FUCKING PAY TAXES, AND HASN'T IN FUCKING YEARS. MOST BILLIONAIRES DON'T. AND THE IRS DOESN'T CARE BECAUSE IT'S 'TOO COMPLICATED' (Their words) TO AUDIT THE WEALTHY.

OUR RIGHT TO TAX HIM AT 50 FUCKING PERCENT IS BECAUSE TAXES WERE MEANT TO BE FROM EACH ACCORDING TO THEIR MEANS.

OUR RIGHT TO TAX HIM AND ALL THE OTHER BILLIONAIRES AND THEIR TRILLION DOLLAR COMPANIES IS BECAUSE NONE OF THEM HAVE PAID THEIR FUCKING DUES TO SOCIETY IN A FUCKING GODDAMNED DECADE, WHILE THEIR COMPANIES ARE THE ONES KILLING THE FUCKING PLANET. THEY FUCKING OWE US AT THIS POINT, YES. OWE. US. THEY OWE SOCIETY BECAUSE WE'RE THE REASON THEY MADE THAT FUCKING MONEY, AND THEY ARE THE REASON WE'RE DEALING WITH THESE PROBLEMS TO BEGIN WITH SO THEY GET TO PAY THEIR FUCKING SHARE. AMAZON DOESN'T PAY TAXES. IT'S A TRILLION

FUCKING DOLLAR COMPANY. I CAN BARELY COMPREHEND HOW BIG A BILLION IS. A TRILLION IS A LOT FUCKING BIGGER.

FUCK BEZO
FUCK AMAZON
FUCK BILLIONAIRES
FUCK THEIR COMPANIES
IF WE, THE POOR, HAVE TO PAY FUCKING TAXES, THEN THE BILLIONAIRE CLASS SURE AS SHIT CAN.

when I become an eccentric billionaire I'm going to buy every house in 10 square blocks of unremarkable suburb. I will have them all furnished and decorated except for (and this is key) one house in the dead center. this house I will put up for sale at a ridiculously reasonable price for the area. once it sells, and the new owner/couple/family moves in, the plan will spring into action.

every single house besides the one in the center within my 10 square blocks will remain uninhabited. I will put all the lights inside on timers so that it appears that people are living in there, I will have lawns mowed when I'm sure everyone in my victim house is at work/school, I will have decorations put up during the holidays and cars moved there and parked in driveways when I'm sure that the owner/couple/family in the house at the center is not there to witness it happening. I will produce all the superficial trappings of life without a single person actually being there.

who knows how long it'll take them to realize that something is wrong? when their kids are playing in the yard, and they notice they've never seen another child around here even once, despite the four-bedroom family homes all down the street? after a few weeks, when they realize the lights in the house across the way click off at exactly 9:45, on the second, every single night? when they've been living there for a month and a half and they realize they've never seen a single car park in front of another house? when they want to greet their neighbors and not a single house in the whole neighborhood opens its door?

when they do realize that they're completely alone here, what would they do with that fact? what would you do if all at once, as you stood in a crowd, you realized that every single person around you was a mannequin? it's unnerving, sure, but enough to warrant a move? how long will they live in this idyllic ghost town before it gets to them? can a person survive in a dollhouse? Thank you. I wave to the crowd as I walk offstage at my ted talk. one person gives a halfhearted round of applause from the back. a talk about sustainable ecosystem management was scheduled for right now and no one knows how I got up here.

100 Reasons NOT To Kill Yourself

1. We would miss you.
2. It's not worth the regret. Either by yourself if you failed or just simply left scars, or the regret everyone else feels by not doing enough to help you.
3. It does get better. Believe it or not it will eventually get better. Sometimes you have to go through the storm to get to the rainbow.
4. There's so much you would miss out on doing.
5. There is always a reason to live. It might not be clear right now, but it is always there.
6. So many people care, and it would hurt them if you hurt yourself.
7. You ARE worth it. Don't let anyone, especially yourself, tell you otherwise.
8. You are amazing.
9. A time will come, once you've battled the toughest times of your life and are in ease once again, where you will be so glad that you decided to keep on living. You will emerge stronger from this all, and won't regret your choice to carry on with life. Because things always get better.
10. What about all the things you've always wanted to do? What about the things you've planned, but never got around to doing? You can't do them when you're dead.
11. I love you. Even if only one person loves you, that's still a reason to stay alive.
12. You won't be able to listen to music if you die.
13. Killing yourself is never worth it. You'll hurt both yourself and all the people you care about.
14. There are so many people that would miss you, including me.
15. You're preventing a future generation, YOUR KIDS, from even being born.
16. How do you think your family would feel? Would it improve their lives if you died?
17. You're gorgeous, amazing, and to someone you are perfect.
18. Think about your favourite music artist, you'll never hear their voice again...
19. You'll never have the feeling of walking into a warm building on a cold day

20. Listening to incredibly loud music
21. Being alive is just really good.
22. Not being alive is really bad.
23. Finding your soulmate.
24. Red pandas
25. Going to diners at three in the morning.
26. Really soft pillows.
27. Eating pizza in New York City.
28. Proving people wrong with your success.

30. Seeing someone trip over a garbage can.
31. Being able to help other people.
32. Bonfires.
33. Sitting on rooftops.
34. Seeing every single country in the world.
35. Going on roadtrips.
36. You might win the lottery someday.
37. Listening to music on a record player.
38. Going to the top of the Eiffel Tower.
39. Taking really cool pictures.
40. Literally meeting thousands of new people.
41. Hearing crazy stories.
42. Telling crazy stories.
43. Eating ice cream on a hot day.
44. More Harry Potter books could come out, you never know.
45. Travelling to another planet someday.
46. Having an underwater house.
47. Randomly running into your hero on the street.
48. Having your own room at a fancy hotel.
49. Trampolines.
50. Think about your favourite movie, you'll never watch it again.
51. Think about the feeling of laughing out loud in a public place because your best friend has just sent you an inside joke,
52. Your survival will make the world better, even if it's for just one person or 20 or 100 or more.
53. People do care.
54. Treehouses
55. Hanging out with your soul mate in a treehouse

55. Snorting when you laugh and not caring who sees
56. I don't even know you and I love you.
57. I don't even know you and I care about you.
58. Because nobody is going to be like you ever, so embrace your uniqueness!
59. You won't be here to experience the first cat world emperor.
60. WHAT ABOUT FOOD?! YOU'LL MISS CHOCOLATE AND ALL THE OTHER NOM THINGS!
61. Starbucks.
62. Hugs.
63. Stargazing.
64. You have a purpose, and it's up to you to find out what it is.
65. You've changed somebody's life.
66. Now you could change the world.
67. You will meet the person that's perfect for you.
68. No matter how much or how little, you have your life ahead of you.
69. You have the chance to save somebody's life.
70. If you end your life, you're stopping yourself from achieving great things.
71. Making snow angels.
72. Making snowmen.
73. Snowball fights.
74. Life is what you make of it.
75. Everybody has a talent.
76. Laughing until you cry.
77. Having the ability to be sad means you have the ability to be happy.
78. The world would not be the same if you didn't exist.
79. Its possible to turn frowns, upside down
80. Be yourself, don't take anyone's shit, and never let them take you alive.
81. Heroes are ordinary people who make themselves extraordinary. Be your own hero.
82. Being happy doesn't mean that everything is perfect. It means that you've decided to look beyond the imperfections.
83. One day your smile will be real.
84. Having a really hot, relaxing bath after a stressful day.

85. Lying on grass and laughing at the clouds.
86. Getting completely smashed with your best friends.
87. Eating crazy food.
88. Staying up all night watching your favourite films with a loved one.
89. Sleeping in all day.
90. Creating something you're proud of.
91. You can look back on yourself 70 years later and being proud you didn't commit
92. Being able to meet your Internet friends.
93. Tea / Coffee / Hot Chocolate
94. Sherlock season three.
95. Cuddling under the stars.
96. Being stupid in public because you just can.
97. If you are reading this then you are alive! Is there any more reason to smile?
98. being able to hug that one person you havent seen in years
99. People care enough about you and your future to come up with 100 reasons for you not to do this.
100. But, the final and most important one is, just, being able to experience life. Because even if your life doesn't seem so great right now, literally anything could happen

Some amazing book dedications:

This book is dedicated to all the family members who were angry that I dedicated the last book to someone who won the dedication in a Twitter contest.

Hi, Dad!

waves

Ania, I love you; will you marry me?

to my mother,
who liked the bit about the horse

For Carley, who was a better person than I am even though she was a dog

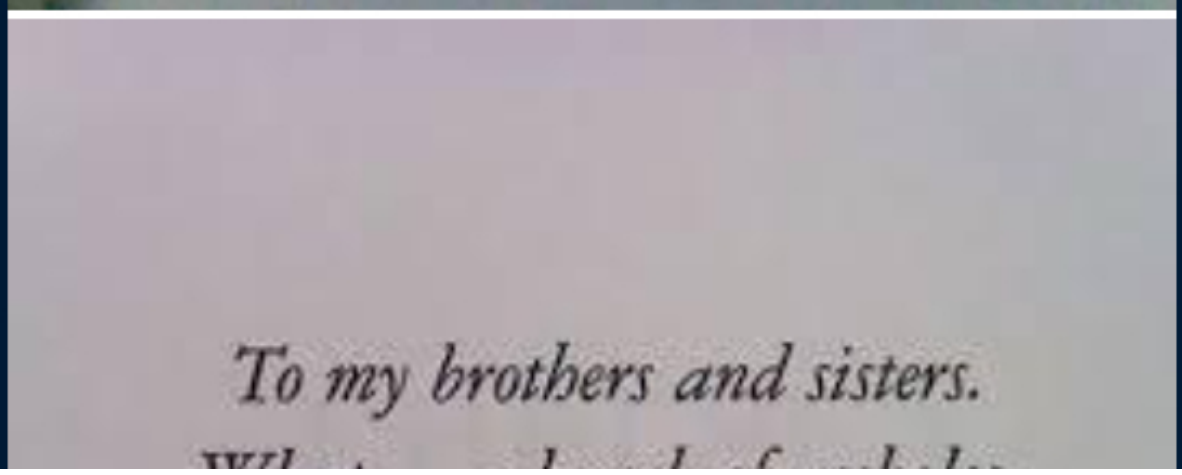
To all my enemies,
I will destroy you.



To my brothers and sisters.

What . . . a bunch of assholes.

For Colin Firth

You're a really great guy, but I'm married, so I think we should just be friends.

I want to thank everyone who helped me create this book, except for that guy who yelled at me in Kmart when I was eight because he thought I was being "too rowdy."

You're an asshole, sir.

This is why I stopped selling on Etsy. I got really sick and tired of all that nonsense.

if you have a chinese character and you don't understand our naming traditions, do not give them a chinese name. you cannot just slap on a name that "sounds right" or the name of a famous person (that's actually bad luck) onto them. that's not how our names work and if you operate like that you're being lazy and culturally insensitive. if you're writing a contemporary story, just give them a western name and use their last name to indicate their ethnic background. (you can use a chinese celebrity's western name as inspiration though.)

chinese names work in very different ways and it's dependent on what your parents want for your future, what day and time you were born, the chinese characters (and the amount of strokes in them), your last name, and your family. there are actual services to give your child a name that will denote a happy, healthy, and fortunate life that takes all of that into consideration. in many families, there are actual meetings on what to name a child. this doesn't even consider the language you speak and where you live/which province you come from (dear god if you give a person from a cantonese speaking region/lineage a mandarin name i will choose violence when reading your work). if you do not understand the language, if you do not understand the traditions, if you do not do your research, you will just look like the court jester about to get his head lopped off. please just do not even attempt giving your chinese character a chinese name if you're not willing to do the work. if you're really insistent about giving your characters a chinese name, you can support the community by actually paying someone to help you give your characters names. you can look them up and research people in your area.

What to do if you find yourself homless- written by someone who has actually been homeless

Most important: Spend the money you have on a motel. Churches probably will not actually help and shelters can be dangerous or turn you away. At a motel you have free breakfast, access to running water, and a lockable place to sleep. Do not waste money on a gym membership like the popular version of this post says to do, YMCA memberships are like $40.

2. Contact family and friends. Now is not the time to worry about being a burden. Your survival and safety comes first and that is all that matters, anyone worth having in your life will agree.

3. Start a gofundme. Even if someone can't offer you a place to stay, they might be willing to toss out $5 so you can eat today.

4. Libraries have free wifi. Apply to any and all jobs you can think of if you aren't already working.

5. Any home is a good home. Even if it's a dingy apartment in a bad neighborhood. If its cheap and you can afford it, snatch it up.

6. Pancake mix and peanut butter are filling, cheap, and last a long time.

PLEASE SHARE THE FUCK OUT OF THIS

scar bad

scar neutral

scar good

scar is an extremely well written and three dimensional character whose actions are mainly driven by grief and trauma induced by being the victim of genocide and seeing his entire family dying right before his eyes therefore trying to simplify his morality means ignoring the series' impeccable writing and ultimately missing the moral of the overarching plot about self growth and redemption through your own actions
